Acknowledgements

As so typical of publication projects, this book – and we as its editors – have benefitted from an array of fortunate events and a range of supportive people, whose help we would like to acknowledge. Our most hearty thanks go to

- the numerous participants at the Symposium of the AILA Research Network on “CLIL and immersion classrooms: applied linguistic perspectives” during the AILA 2008 conference in Essen, Germany, whose interest and involvement sparked off the idea of publishing a CLIL volume;
- the editors Susanne Niemeier and Kees van Vaes for taking the idea of this volume on board and helping it through to fruition, not least with their speedy communication;
- the contributors for being so disciplined in their time-keeping and patience with us editors;
- Heidi Byrnes, Robert Wilkinson and Dieter Wolff, whose criticism was enriching in its diversity and helped crystallize and sharpen the contents in significant ways, especially of the introductory and final chapters;
- Christina Gefäll, Corinna Weiss and Pamela Zankl, whose editing abilities kept us on the straight and narrow with regard to questions of form.

Finally, our collaboration as a team can look back over a number of successfully completed projects and we'd like to take this opportunity to thank each other for being great colleagues, collaborating constructively despite the geographical distance. Skype and Google.docs made many things possible, but personal meetings turned out even more helpful, maybe because the laughs shared when face-to-face proved a highly important energizer to us and the volume.
