Acknowledgments

To all those who through the years have spurred me to further my work in the areas here represented by applying it to their own research.

To the colleagues and students of many universities who give me the opportunity to share my ideas with them, for their very stimulating response.

To John Benjamins' editor Bertie Kaal, who invited me to do this volume; and to my co-authors, who made it possible, for their knowledge and generosity.

To my University of New Brunswick, my God-given scholar's haven, for its continued support of thirty years.
