ACKNOWLEDGMENTS

This project began exactly five years ago, in May 1995 when I met with Pier Marco Bertinetto to discuss the possibility of publishing a collection of essays on Phonological Theory and the Dialects of Italy. The book was originally intended to be a companion volume to Adriana Belletti's excellent reader on Syntactic Theory and the Dialects of Italy (Torino: Rosenberg & Sellier, 1993). I was encouraged to pursue the project by Pier Marco Bertinetto, to whom I am particularly grateful for the support and encouragement he has shown me. I contacted the contributors soon thereafter, and the project was under way. I would like to extend my most heartfelt thanks to the contributors who have always been extremely patient and cooperative despite the many delays that we have experienced. Each article was peer reviewed, and I would like to thank the scholars who generously helped in the review process, including Mark Aronoff, Christina Bethin, Ellen Broselow, Luigi Burzio, Thomas Cravens, Robert Hoberman, José Hualde, Marie Huffman, Christine Kamprath, Michael Kenstowicz, Elinor Payne, Keren Rice, Bert Vaux, and Draga Zec. Thanks also go to Konrad Koerner and Anke de Looper for their precious assistance in publishing this volume.

Finally, many many people have helped me during the preparation of this collection in various ways that are not always easy to define, and I would especially like to thank Mark Aronoff, John Bailyn, Anna Cardinaletti, Laura Minervini, Christina Tortora, my parents, my sisters, my daughter, and most of all Peter Ludlow, to whom I dedicate this book.
