ACKNOWLEDGMENTS

The impetus for this book was a workshop organised by the editors entitled ‘Workshop on Reconstruction and Subgrouping in Australian Languages’, which formed part of the program of the 15th International Conference on Historical Linguistics held in Melbourne, 13-17 August 2001. The editors thank the conference organisers, Professors Barry Blake and Kate Burridge, then of La Trobe University, for giving us a full day in their program. We also thank all those who attended and spoke at the workshop, including those who have not contributed to the resulting book. Special thanks are due to Lyle Campbell, the official discussant at the Workshop.

We thank all the contributors to the volume for writing up papers to our sometimes demanding requirements. We thank all our many colleagues who provided encouragement and support in the production of the volume and advice on particular papers, especially David Nash, Jay Jasanoff, Jane Simpson, Sally Thomason, and Darrell Tryon, plus those mentioned by individual contributors.

We gratefully acknowledge the assistance of The Australian National University for providing a publication subsidy through its Publications Committee and offered logistical support through its School of Language Studies, within the Faculty of Arts. Claire Bowerman would like to thank the School of Language Studies for providing two visiting fellowships during the preparation of this volume.

We thank Konrad Koerner, series editor of Current Issues in Linguistic Theory, and Anke de Looper of John Benjamins Publishing Company for assistance and advice in seeing the book through publication.
