ACKNOWLEDGEMENTS

We gratefully acknowledge the funding for the Workshop on Athabaskan Prosody (held June 2000 in Moricetown, BC) which was provided by a 1999 Social Sciences and Humanities Research Council (SSHRC) of Canada Grant to Occasional Conferences (awarded to Antonia Mills, Margaret Anderson, and Sharon Hargus). Keren Rice's work on the book was partially funded by grant #410-99-1309 from SSHRC. We also thank the work-study program at the University of Toronto for its help in funding the preparation of the book.

We thank all the contributors to this volume for their willingness to go through sometimes numerous revisions of their papers with good humor. All have been a pleasure to work with.

We owe special thanks to a few people. Rob Hagiwara carefully read and commented on one of the manuscripts for the editors. Chiara Frigeni took the first crack at the difficult task of preparing Michael Krauss's article from the original typescript, a typescript that was full of handwritten additions and amendments. She, together with Sandhya Chari, prepared camera-ready copy of most of the rest of the articles. This task has been an enormous amount of work, and we offer Chiara and Sandhya our deepest thanks. Daniel Currie Hall was of invaluable assistance with fonts, with understanding idiosyncracies of Microsoft Word, and in numerous other ways. The map which accompanies the Krauss article is based on the map 'Development of tone systems' prepared for the Handbook of North American Indians under the supervision of Ives Goddard. We thank Ives Goddard for giving us permission to use his map as the basis for ours. Clarence Griffin provided helpful advice on Photoshop during the preparation of the map. Lisa Usibelli greatly facilitated Sharon Hargus's work with Michael Krauss on the final preparation of his article, including the recent corrections and annotations.

We thank Michael Krauss for allowing us to publish his article on tone and tonogenesis. The field of linguistics is deeply indebted to him intellectually for his commitment to excellence in Athabaskan linguistics and his many contributions to this endeavor.
