ACKNOWLEDGEMENTS

In 2001, Professors Tuomas Huumo (University of Turku) and Lea Laitinen (University of Helsinki) joined their efforts and started to collaborate on a project called “Grammar and the Human Conceptualizer,” which aimed to study how grammar reflects the viewpoints of the language users — that is, the human conceptualizers. We wish to express our gratitude to the Academy of Finland for supporting this project, which made possible the several workshops where the authors of papers in this volume were able to meet and discuss the contents of their papers. The Academy’s support made possible the visits and participation of Ronald Langacker, Ritva Laury, and Lyle Campbell. In addition, Lyle Campbell’s visit to the University of Turku was supported by funding from the University of Turku.

We thank Ronald Langacker for his participation and support throughout the project and the publication of this volume. We also thank the anonymous reviewers of this volume, and Konrad Koerner for editorial advice. We are grateful to Anke de Looper of John Benjamins Publishing Company for her help in editing the papers.
