This book grew out of my 2003 Ph.D thesis at the University of Basel, Switzerland. Some of the contents and ideas have also been addressed in pilot research papers and conference proceedings (Langlotz 2001a, 2001b, 2004a, 2005; Langlotz forthcoming, under review).

My special thanks go to Jan Nuyts, Marcelo Dascal and Ray Gibbs for having accepted this book for publication in the Human Cognitive Processing series. I am very grateful for their critical and stimulating comments, which helped me turn my dissertation into a much better, more coherent and accessible text.

I would also like to thank the following people for having directly or indirectly supported me in writing the dissertation. I am very grateful to Willy Elmer and Annelies Häcki Buhofer, who have motivated me to write the thesis and have always given me a great deal of intellectual and moral support. I owe many thanks to David Allerton, Dmitrij Dobrovol'skij and Harald Burger for the stimulating and inspiring discussions on phraseology and language and their critical comments on many of my ideas. Very special thanks go to my colleagues and friends Christoph Ebell, Daniele Ganser, Alexandra Guski, Regula Hohl, Danièle Klapproth, Nadja Nesselhauf, Andie Ochsner, Guy Schiltz, Philipp Schweighauser, Paul Skandera and Judith Wieser, who have motivated me – in all sorts of uncountable ways – to continue my work in good and not so good times: without you, academia would be a much duller place. I feel as well great gratitude to the many teachers and professors, especially Othmar Gisi, Jürg Bauer and Hartwig Isernhagen, who have convinced me that English is the most thrilling subject to study.

My deepest feelings go to all of my family, especially my parents and my parents-in-law. Where would I be without your helping hands, great guidance and emotional support?

There are no words to express what I feel for my wife Carla and my children Fiona and Nicola – . . . I thank you so much for being so patient, sympathetic, strong and loving.
