This book is a revised version of my 2013-doctoral thesis at Ludwig-Maximilians-Universität (Munich University). As I would certainly not have been able to finish it without the help of a whole range of people, I would like to thank them in the following. First and foremost, I owe a lot to my supervisors Prof. Hans-Jörg Schmid and Prof. Ulrich Detges for their continual support. Without Prof. Detges, who aroused my interest in the variation and modification of phraseological units and provided much valuable initial input, this book would not exist. I am very grateful to Prof. Schmid for never losing patience with me and encouraging me in my empirical approach. His willingness to discuss any new idea and his supportive practical suggestions have especially contributed to keeping me motivated throughout the whole project.

During the revision of my thesis manuscript, I have also received many helpful comments, both from the editors of the HCP series, Linda Thornburg and Klaus-Uwe Panther, and from the two referee reports. I am very grateful for all their suggestions, which have substantially contributed to improving the initial version and to increasing its reader-friendliness.

I would also like to thank two institutions for their support of a different kind. Universität Bayern made financing this book possible by awarding me a graduate scholarship, while Munich's doctoral programme for linguistics, LIPP, provided the opportunity to broaden my academic horizons in numerous ways. The exchange with other doctoral students and with professors from a wide range of linguistic subfields has always been a great inspiration. Furthermore, the encouragement to gain experience in the fields of conference organisation, international presentation, and editing has been highly appreciated. I owe a particular debt of gratitude to our coordinator Caroline Trautmann for her support and motivation.

Many thanks also goes to Prof. Leonard Lipka for his inspiring comments and keeping an eye open for English and French substitutions. I am grateful to Andi Langlotz as well for his advice on my association experiment and his encouragement. For statistical advice on the recognition experiment, I am most obliged to my dear friend Conceição Cunha, and even more so to Stephan D. Werner for his infinite patience and support in this matter. At this point, I would also like to mention three fellow PhD students who have been dear companions from the beginning to the end of my project, shared ideas, and informed me whenever they came across a potentially interesting modification, namely Ursula Stangel, Tabea Reiner, and Angela Lamberty. I equally appreciate the help from various LIPP students and professors (in particular Anne-Katharina Harr, Hans-Jörg Schmid, Ulrich Detges, Thomas Krefeld, and Benjamin Meisnitzer) who have made their classes available for the two experiments – without them, I would never have managed to gain access to a total of 250 students in such an uncomplicated way. Meanwhile, two people who have kindly assisted me with the English language are Kathleen Rabl, who has instructed me in academic writing and proof-read the thesis, and George Savvides, who was willing to answer questions at any time of the day and advised me on the writing of abstracts.

Finally, my special thanks goes to those who supported me personally, who have always encouraged me to follow my passion for language and known how to give me new strength during the difficult periods any doctoral dissertation experiences at times. I am very grateful that my friends and my parents, with their unconditional affection, never tired of showing me that they believed in me and my competence, but also helped me focus on the other things that are essential in life.
