ACKNOWLEDGEMENTS

This book is based upon my doctoral dissertation, completed at the University of Tübingen in May 2005, which was supported by the Deutsche Forschungsgemeinschaft as part of the Collaborative Research Centre Linguistic Data Structures.

First and foremost I would like to express my profound intellectual and personal gratitude to Marga Reis. Little bits of her occur throughout these pages: her knowledge, for instance of the intricacies of German grammar; her interests, for example for historical syntax; but also her approach to research, above all, the insight that linguistic theorizing should build on a sound descriptive basis. I deeply appreciate her generous support, her encouragement to develop my own ideas, her human warmth and kindness. I owe her much.

I would also like to express my warm thanks to Veronika Ehrich, who has accompanied me throughout my linguistic training with her kind advice and active support. She contributed immensely to the academically stimulating environment in which the work in this book took place.

I am grateful too to the other two members of my dissertation committee, Ulrike Demske and Wolfgang Sternefeld, for their interest in my work and their valuable comments. Thanks also for Ulrike's support since I have been at Saarland University.

The exciting research atmosphere at the Collaborative Research Centre Linguistic Data Structures in Tübingen was a social and intellectual pleasure and a spur to activity. I would like to thank my colleagues Sam Featherston, Nele Hartung-Schaidhammer, Daniel Holl, Reimar Müller, Dirk Wiebel and, in particular, Serge Doitchinov, who were always ready to join in enthralling discussions on both linguistic and non-linguistic topics.

Tanja Kiziak and Helmut Weiß deserve special thanks for their many helpful remarks on this book and for our fruitful exchanges.

I am indebted to the editors of this series, Werner Abraham and Elly van Gelderen, and to the managing editor Kees Vaes for their help in preparing the manuscript for publication. Special thanks are extended to Kirsten Brock for her thorough proof-reading.

I wish to thank my parents and family for their loving care over the years and last, but not least, Carsten for his patience, encouragement and love.
