This book grew out of my dissertation “The Grammar of Have in a Have-less Language: Possession, Perfect, and Ergativity in North Russian,” submitted to the Department of Slavic Languages and Literatures of Harvard University in May, 2008. In reshaping, reorganizing, and extending analyses from the dissertation during the past few years, I have repeatedly realized how fortunate I was to have numerous people helping me to become an independent researcher with my own perspective. This book could not have come out without their support.

This book owes the greatest intellectual debts to Michael S. Flier and Andrew I. Nevins, who guided and inspired me in the dissertation writing process and also read parts of my manuscript. I also thank Karlos Arregi, Rajesh Bhatt, Jonathan Bobaljik, Cedric Boeckx, Sue Brown, Andriy Danylenko, Steven Franks, Stephanie Harves, Soo-Yeon Jeong, Heejeong Ko, Natalia Kondrashova, Kyongjoon Kwon, James Lavine, Andrea Moro, Maria Polinsky, Cilene Rodrigues, Andrès Salanova, Alan Timberlake, and Victor Zhivov, who gave me concrete comments and advice on my research. For helping me collect the Russian and North Russian data, I thank Natalia Chirkov, Zhanna Glushan, Olga Kim, Natalia Kun, Sergej Myznikov, Natalia Pokrovsk, Nina Radkevich, Vladimir Shnikov, and Vadim Slepchenko.

Parts of this book have been presented at various conferences including the Formal Approaches to Slavic Linguistics 17, the 2008 annual meeting of the American Association for the Advancement of Slavic Studies, and Diachronic Syntax in Slavonic Languages. I thank the participants of the conferences for their helpful comments.

I am grateful to Werner Abraham and Elly van Gelderen for encouraging and guiding me in the process of working on the manuscript. I also thank Kees Vaes, Patricia Leplae, and typesetters for their tolerance and help in the publication. Thanks are also due to Lesley Goodman and Matthew W. Herrington for their careful proofreading.

Finally, I would like to thank my parents. They have consistently supported me and had faith in me during the entire course of my study at Harvard and the years back in Korea. I dedicate this book to my parents.
