Preface

This volume is a collection of original papers on topical issues concerning various empirical and theoretical aspects of linguistic meaning. Its aim is to advance the current debate among theoretical and experimental linguists on the interface between pragmatics and semantics. All articles are versions of presentations given at the workshop “Experimental Pragmatics/Semantics”, held in February 2008 at the University of Bamberg, Germany. The workshop was part of the Annual Meeting of the German Linguistic Society (DGfS).

We would like to thank the authors for their contributions to this volume and for their cooperativeness during the reviewing and publication process. We would also like to thank Werner Abraham and Elly van Gelderen for their helpful comments and for the opportunity to publish this volume in their Linguistik Aktuell/Linguistic Today series. We are grateful to Sina Schade and Sven Müller in helping us with the preparation of the typescript. And last but not least we thank Kees Vaes for his patience and his professional editorial assistance.
