Preface

This book has arisen from papers presented at the York-Essex Morphology Meeting (YEMM) at the University of York in 2006, and the University of Essex in 2007. In preparing the proceedings from the two YEMM meetings, we realised that the theme of the nature of Morphology and its interfaces had emerged out of the papers presented there; with this theme in mind, we then sought additional contributions for chapters. YEMM's mission is to bring together cutting-edge research in morphology from a variety of theoretical perspectives, encouraging lively cross-theoretical discussion and stimulating future collaborations. While this is a distinct volume which only has its initial origins in the YEMM workshops, we very much hope that the spirit of YEMM is captured herein.

We would like to warmly thank all of the contributors to this volume for their efforts and energy in preparing and revising their chapters, and for their patience in awaiting the publication of the volume. We selected anonymous reviewers for each individual chapter, and the reviewers' careful and timely responses have substantially improved the quality of these papers, as was noted by several of the authors. We gratefully acknowledge the support of the John Benjamins series editors Elly van Gelderen and Werner Abraham for their advice and comments on the manuscript, and extend our thanks to the rest of the John Benjamins editorial team for their usual efficiency in preparing the volume for publication.
