I would like to thank those that have contributed to the completion of this work, of whom the most important is undoubtedly Ad Neeleman. His ideas have been a constant source of inspiration, and his encouragement and optimism have been invaluable to me. His support in the thorny realm of career development is also warmly appreciated, as is that of David Adger and Caroline Heycock. Next, I would like to thank Klaus Abels, Hans van de Koot and Reiko Vermeulen for their extensive comments on parts of this work, as well as two anonymous Lingua reviewers and audiences at LAGB 2008 (at the University of Essex) and the 2008 Cleft Workshop at ZAS, Berlin for their attention and comments. I have also made use of grammaticality/acceptability judgements from the following people, whom I hereby thank: Dirk Bury, Ivona Kučerová, Ad Neeleman, Roumyana Pancheva, Nausicaa Pouscoulous, Ljiljana Progovac, Vieri Samek-Lodovici, Radek Šimík, Sandra Stjepanović, Peter Svenonius, Elena Titov and Beata Zacharska. Elena Titov, in particular, made a major contribution to Chapters 4 and 5 through the many discussions we had about Russian clefts and specificational sentences. I have also benefited from email discussions with, in addition to many of the people above, Yoryia Agouraki, Lydia Grebenyova and Catherine Rudin. Thanks also to the Ph.D. student and postdoc body of UCL Linguistics, past and present, for making the department such a stimulating, but also friendly, place to do linguistics, and to Glyn Hicks for making my year at the University of Southampton such an enjoyable one. Elly van Gelderen, Werner Abraham and Kees Vaes at John Benjamins made the publication process painless and quick, for which I am very grateful.
