Acknowledgements

This book has benefited from the efforts of many individuals besides my own. I want to first of all thank the native speakers who patiently gave me their judgments: Enno and Ulrike Aufderheide, Beáta Bacskey, Victor Dmitriev, Tatsuya Fukushima, Miklós Gáspár, Elly van Gelderen, Anine Singh-de Grood, Brigitta Haftka, Katharina Hartmann, Eungcheon Hah, Anders Holmberg, Jean-Charles Khalifa, Frédérique Knottnerus, Erik Magnusson (and anonymous informants he solicited help from), Line Mikkelsen, Vera Lee-Schönfeld, Karin Schestokat, Manuela Schönenberger, Jochen Schumacher, Kerstin Schwabe, Halldór Sigurdsson, Peter Stadtmüller, Christine Sternberg (who also helped me locate an obscure source), Matthias Trautner, Niina Zang, Jan-Wouter Zwart, and others I've undoubtedly forgotten.

Portions of this book were presented at conferences and therefore benefited from input of the participants, whose names I often did not record. These conferences include the 1998 workshop on Ellipsis in Conjunction at the Zentrum für Allgemeine Sprachwissenschaft (ZAS), Berlin, where I first met Alan Munn, who on another occasion provided valuable comments; the June, 1999 meeting of TABU-dag at the University of Groningen (thanks, Jan-Wouter, for introduction and comments); WECOL 99 (El Paso, where Grant Goodall gave me helpful comments) and 2000 (Calstate, Fresno, where Norvin Richards provided me with some very interesting data); the Salford Conference on Coordination (2001) (thank you Robin and Diane!) where I met another expert on coordination, Janna Johannessen; the 9th, 10th, and 11th meetings of GLAC (Germanic Linguistics Annual Conference); and particularly the 18th and 20th meetings of the CGSW (Comparative Workshop on Germanic Linguistics) in Durham and Tilburg, respectively, where I met more native speakers of North Germanic languages who provided me with data: Anders, Halldór and Erik. Brigitta Haftka, whom I met at the UCLA GLAC meeting, deserves special mention for taking much of her valuable time to show me around ZAS and introduce me to other scholars there. Of these Ewald Lang and Kerstin Schwabe provided me with significant input on my work.

No single individual deserves more thanks than Manuela Schönenberger; not only did she suffer through an early draft of the entire book, she also – most valuably – provided me with detailed, frank and insightful comments on every aspect of it. Probably most helpful for my continuation of the project was her comment that it was “very interesting.”

For their many forms of support: monetary, organizational and scholarly, I am deeply indebted to the Fulbright Commission, particularly the Fulbright-Kommission,

Bonn, for making my stay at ZAS possible from January to July, 1999. Ewald Lang was also very helpful in this arrangement, as were the office and technical support staff, particularly Frank Heinsberg. Also critical in making this sabbatical stay possible were the Department of Foreign Languages and Literatures, and the College of Arts and Sciences at Oklahoma State University. The College of A & S also provided me with two summer research grants (2001, 2003), as well as two travel grants for attending conferences, without which my research and writing in the summer and the presenting of my work would not have been possible.

Werner Abraham deserves special thanks for expressing interest in the book early on, as well as for showing interest in my work since we first met in Tübingen in 1986. Thanks to both series editors, Werner and Elly van Gelderen, for assisting in the review process, and to the editorial staff at John Benjamins Publishing, especially Kees Vaes, for their efficient and friendly manner of handling the conversion of my computer print-outs into very precise and attractive type-set pages. I had no idea a book could come out of my printed pages so quickly – a worthy model for the publishing world.

Needless to say, none of the individuals I have mentioned is responsible for any remaining errors in the book, and I will undoubtedly regret not following their advice on many points.

Dedication
