

Acknowledgments

 <https://doi.org/10.1075/lal.15.01ack>

Pages xi–xiv of

The Art of Sympathy in Fiction: Forms of ethical and emotional persuasion

Howard Sklar

[Linguistic Approaches to Literature, 15] 2013. xiv, 192 pp.

© John Benjamins Publishing Company

This electronic file may not be altered in any way. For any reuse of this material written permission should be obtained from the publishers or through the Copyright Clearance Center (for USA: www.copyright.com).

For further information, please contact rights@benjamins.nl or consult our website at benjamins.com/rights

Acknowledgments

While only I am responsible, in the end, for the final content of this work, I am convinced that this study would be considerably weaker were it not for the many individuals who, through their formal guidance, interested observations, and concern for my welfare and my project, have provided assistance or voiced their thoughts and concerns along the way.

I would first like to give my thanks to the wonderful people at Benjamins who have given their time and positive energy to this project. I have benefitted immensely from the contribution of the former editor of the Linguistic Approaches to Literature series, Willie van Peer, whose valuable critical comments and enthusiastic encouragement of my work generally have significantly enhanced this project. I have also been delighted to work with the co-editor of the series, Sonia Zyngier, whose careful and thoughtful feedback has helped me to develop this book, I believe, into a more readable and relevant work. Many thanks also to the other co-editor of the series, Max Louwerse, and to Kees Vaes and Patricia Leplae of Benjamins for their kind contributions to the completion of the book.

An earlier version of the present manuscript appeared in the form of my doctoral dissertation, which I completed in receiving my Ph.D. at the University of Helsinki in 2008. Among those who contributed to that effort, I am particularly appreciative of the contributions of my primary supervisor, Bo Pettersson, of the English Philology Unit of the Department of Modern Languages, and my secondary supervisor, Klaus Helkama, of the Social Psychology Unit of the Department of Social Research. I would also like to acknowledge the important contribution of Arto Haapala of the Aesthetics Unit of the Department of Philosophy, History, Culture and Art Studies at the University of Helsinki, who provided extensive feedback on material that eventually became the first and second chapters of the dissertation. In addition, I am indebted to several people in the Social Psychology Unit of the Department of Social Research who assisted me with their invaluable statistical and technical expertise: Mia Silfver-Kuhlampi, Antero Olakivi, Liisa Myrsky, and Teemu Vauhkonen. I would also like to thank my dissertation opponent, James Phelan of the Department of English at Ohio State University, and my two dissertation pre-examiners, Suzanne Keen of Washington and Lee University in Lexington, Virginia, and Pekka Tammi of the University of Tampere, Finland, for their thoughtful and thorough examination of my work. Thanks also to Monika

Fludernik of Albert-Ludwigs University in Freiburg, Germany, for helpful suggestions as I neared the completion of my dissertation.

In addition to the formal contribution of these individuals, I also would like to acknowledge my gratitude to several scholars at the University of Helsinki for their kind encouragement of my work: from the English Philology Unit of the Department of Modern Languages, Mark Shackleton, Nely Keinänen, Joseph Flanagan, Merja Polvinen, Juuso Aarnio and Niina Hynninen; and from Comparative Literature, Kai Mikkonen. Thanks also to Tuula Murros and Marketta Piik of the Department of Modern Languages, as well as Tia Svanberg and Taru Kamke of the English Philology Unit of the Department of Modern Languages, for their assistance. Warm thanks, also, to Bent Sørensen (Aalborg University, Denmark) and Camelia Elias (Roskilde University, Denmark), for their support over the years; and to Frank Hakemulder (Utrecht University, The Netherlands) for his encouragement of my research.

The completion of this project would have been impossible without the cooperation and assistance of Erkki Kukkanen, my principal at Kuitinmäen Lower Secondary School in Espoo, Finland. In addition, I would like to express my thanks to the students at three Espoo schools – Kuitinmäen Lower Secondary School, Espoo International Lower Secondary School, and Kilonpuisto School – who generously participated in my study, as well as the principals and teachers in each of those schools for their cooperation. I have also appreciated the responses to some of the material contained in this book by my students at the University of Helsinki, especially those who participated in the course “Fiction, Ethics and the Significance of Reading” in 2006, 2009 and 2011, as well as those in “Fiction and the Emotions” in 2009.

In addition, I wish to acknowledge the assistance of several editors who worked with earlier versions of some of the material that appears in this dissertation:

- The portion of Chapter 4 that deals with Ursula K. Le Guin’s “Betrayals” is based largely on an essay that appeared in the journal Paradoxa: Studies in World Literary Genres, edited by guest editor Sylvia Kelso and managing editor and publisher David Willingham.
- A significant portion of Chapter 5, on Toni Cade Bambara’s “The Hammer Man,” appeared after the completion of my dissertation in Poetics Today 30.3, edited by Meir Sternberg.
- Chapters 1 and 6, on readers’ beliefs about fictional characters and Sherwood Anderson’s “Hands,” respectively, originated with an essay (substantially changed for the present manuscript) that appeared in Cognition and Literary Interpretation in Practice (Helsinki University Press, 2005), edited by Harri Veivo, Bo Pettersson, and Merja Polvinen. A version of Chapter 1 also appeared, following the completion of the dissertation, as an independent essay in Helsinki English Studies 5, the online journal of the English Philology Unit of the Department of Modern Languages at the University of Helsinki.

- A portion of the discussion in Chapter 2 appeared, in slightly different form, in The Grapes of Wrath: Dialogues, under the editorship of Michael Meyer.
- Substantial portions of Chapter 7, on the pedagogical implications of my research, appeared in a special issue of the journal Partial Answers: Journal of Literature and the History of Ideas, edited by guest editors Matti Hyvärinen, Jarmila Mildorf, and Kai Mikkonen, as well as by the journal's editor, Leona Toker.

I would like to extend my sincere thanks to all of these editors, as well as the anonymous readers who reviewed my work for their publications, for their significant and helpful contributions to the development of my essays. I also would like to thank the editors and publishers of each of these publications for permission to reprint or adapt previously published material in the present book.

I am also grateful for the financial support of the following foundations and institutions, which to my great surprise determined – at sometimes critical moments during my research – that my project was worthy of funding: the Ella and Georg Ehrnrooth Foundation (2006, 2008); the Oskar Öflund Foundation (2007, 2008); the Academy of Finland (through the Department of Social Psychology, University of Helsinki, 2006); the University of Helsinki (2007); and the Department of English at the University of Helsinki (2007, 2008).

Aside from these academic contributions, I would like to extend my gratitude and love to my sister-in-law, Tuija Svahnback, my mother-in-law, Mirjam Koski, and my late father-in-law, Heikki Koski, for their support and affection over the years; and to my cousin, Leonard Sklar, for his sustained enthusiasm for, and encouragement of, my work.

Most importantly, I must acknowledge the role that my extended family has played in my life and work: to my parents, Martin and Leah Sklar, who imparted to me their love of learning and the written word, and have continuously encouraged me with their love and confidence in my work; to my sister, Leslie Sklar, for being my esteemed “opponent” on so many issues since childhood – prodding me, always lovingly, to defend my thoughts and concerns; to my late grandmother, Helen Aaron, who died at the age of 96 just before the completion of my dissertation, for the keen and personal interest that she always took in my work and my life; and to my late grandfather, Leon Sklar, whose work as a teacher and principal provided an enduring example of patience and love in his work with young people.

Above all, I am blessed by the love and support that I receive every day from my own family. In the ten years since I began this project in 2002, my children, Gabriel and Hannah, have grown from children to adults. Again and again, as deadlines approached and my level of stress increased, their patience and love and curiosity about my work reminded me of what my proper focus ought to be. I love you both more than I can say!

Finally, after nearly 22 years of marriage and 31 years as my friend, there is no one closer or dearer to me than my dear wife, Katriina. Thank you for the gift of your love and companionship through this life-journey. Minä rakastan sinua aina ja ikuisesti.

Howard Sklar
Helsinki, Finland
December 2012