CHAPTER 1
Introduction: Narrative prospecting 1
1. The crucial question: how does text 'guide' the reader? 1
2. A brief sketch of the research context and methods 3
3. On genre, relevance, scripts, and background 5
4. Guided expectation 8
5. Text integrity 10
6. Predictive reading 11
7. Conclusion 12

CHAPTER 2
Collocation and corpus stylistics 15
1. Studies in discourse prospection and expectation 15
2. Collocational stylistics 18
3. Choosing an appropriate comparator corpus 25
4. A note on the stories selected for analysis 28
5. Conclusion 29

CHAPTER 3
Lexical patternings in short stories 31
1 Word frequencies in "Two Gallants" 31
1.1 "Gallantry" in Dubliners 31
1.2 High and low frequency lexis in "Two Gallants" 33
2. Textual richness measured by lexical diversity 34
2.1 The type-token measure 34
2.2 Lexical innovation and text structure 37
3. Foregrounding via repetitive phrasing or by novelty of phrasing and collocation 40
3.1 Clusters 40

3.2 Achieving the stern task of living: a tissue of not-so-vague associations 42
4. Keyword analysis of "Two Gallants" 47
4.1 Using keywords on "Two Gallants": section by section 50

CHAPTER 4
Top keyword sentences as story waymarking 53
1. A top keyword abridgement of "Two Gallants" 53
2. Applying the top keyword procedure in story abridgements 59
2.1 Updike's "A & P" 59
2.2 Carver's "Boxes" 63
2.3 Carver's "Cathedral" 66
3. Further procedural questions about the top keyword method 68
3.1 Distinguishing the top keyword from other frequent keywords. 68
3.2 On the importance, in the top keyword, of proper name status. 70
4. Some interim conclusions 71

CHAPTER 5
Keywords and the language of guidance in "The Love of a Good Woman" 77
1. Story opening as initial guidance 77
2. Top lexical keywords as narrativity indices 87
3. Textual segmentation and keywords' collocate 90
4. Local (within-section) interrelation and collocation of keywords 93

CHAPTER 6
Repetition and para-repetition in story structure 97
1. A more delicate keywords and plotlinks analysis of "The Love of a Good Woman" 97
2. Keyword personal pronouns and idiolect-signalling 100
3. The non-repetitive echo: long-distance patterning via associated lexis and analogy 103
3.1 Rubbing and scratching surfaces 103
3.2 Dark above, light below 104
3.3 Sorrowful plummeting 105
3.4 Bashing, banging and braining 106
4. Para-repetitive narrative bonding between story opening and remainder 108

CHAPTER 7
Prospection and expectation: Core signalling 113
1. Sentences featuring named main characters 114
   1.1 High frequency and keyword character referencing 114
   1.2 Modelling cohesive chains in long texts by sampling 116
2. Narrative-tense finite verbs in character-depicting action clauses 119
   2.1 Narrative-tense verbs with inquits excluded 120
   2.2 VVD density 123
   2.3 Is independent capture of narrative-tense action verbs needed? 125
3. The cueing power of first sentences of narrative paragraphs 126
4. Narrativity carried by "fully lexical" frequent keywords and clusters 128
   4.1 Frequent keywords 128
   4.2 Clusters 132

CHAPTER 8
Prospection and expectation: Embedded signalling 135
1. The heightened narrativity of characters' represented thought 136
   1.1 Automating identification of FIT: rule 1, narrative modal verbs with pronouns 137
   1.2 Exclude modals following if, whether, that… 138
   1.3 Automating identification of FIT: Rule 2, include all questions and exclamations in the narrative 139
   1.4 Automating identification of FIT: Rule 3, include all flanking sentences containing subjective modals 140
   1.5 Modifying the three FIT-finding procedures 140
   2. Prospective direct speech 145
3. Negation-carrying clauses 148
4. Narrative verbs of modality and mental processing 150
5. Implementing the model with "Two Gallants" 152
6. Compiling the abridgement 157

CHAPTER 9
The textual tracking of suspense and surprise 165
1. Narrative suspense 165
2. Narrative surprise 171
3. Textualising suspense in "Two Gallants" 174
4. Textualising surprise in "Bliss" and "A Small, Good Thing" 179

CHAPTER 10
Next steps 189
1. Corpus-based study of narrativity: a work in progress. 189
2. Expanding and refining the model: modality and evaluation 192
3. The reader's experience of the text 195
4. Directions for future research 196
