

Acknowledgments

 <https://doi.org/10.1075/lald.11.01ack>

Pages xi–xii of

Interlanguage and Learnability: From Chinese to English

Virginia Yip

[Language Acquisition and Language Disorders, 11]

1995. xvi, 247 pp.

© John Benjamins Publishing Company

This electronic file may not be altered in any way. For any reuse of this material written permission should be obtained from the publishers or through the Copyright Clearance Center (for USA: www.copyright.com).

For further information, please contact rights@benjamins.nl or consult our website at benjamins.com/rights

Acknowledgments

This book is a substantially revised version of my Ph.D. thesis written at the Department of Linguistics at the University of Southern California. I am grateful to many colleagues and friends who have assisted me in one way or another to bring this work to completion. Above all, I thank the ubiquitous speakers of “Chinglish” (intended in an affectionate sense) who provided the data for analysis in this book, and without whom the project would never have been conceived in the first place.

I thank all my mentors, too numerous to enumerate, who have taught me linguistics; the researchers who have demonstrated to me that the study of language acquisition, whether first or second, could be so stimulating and rewarding; and the scholars who have bridged the two fields by applying linguistic theory to language acquisition. The work of Robert Bley-Vroman, Lydia White and Helmut Zobl has been especially inspiring in this respect. Among my own mentors, I feel most deeply indebted to Bill Rutherford and Jackie Schachter, whose research and publications have inspired me since before I came to be their student. Bill has kindled my interest in second language learnability. He has always been most generous with his time and private library, and I owe special thanks to him for reading the revised manuscript and providing much-needed guidance and comments as well as his practical help in bringing this book into being. Jackie has been a wonderful friend and colleague. Her perceptive feedback and exemplary standards have contributed to shaping the thesis in various ways. It has been my privilege and pleasure to work closely with both Bill and Jackie and to benefit from their expertise. Thanks are also due to Nigel Duffield and Tim Shi, whose invaluable comments and suggestions have led to numerous improvements. Special thanks to my colleagues in the CUHK

English department, especially Thomas Lee and Gladys Tang, who have provided much-appreciated stimulation and discussion on topics of mutual interest in acquisition.

My one-semester leave from the Chinese University of Hong Kong has been instrumental in giving me the luxury of concentrating single-mindedly on the book. I am also grateful for a Staff Development Grant from the university which supported my stay in Los Angeles during my leave, where I benefitted especially from discussions in the reading group at USC orchestrated by Bill Rutherford, Joe Allen and Hiro Oshita. A grant from the Hong Kong Research Grants Council (project HKU 238/92H) also supported preparation of this book.

Stephen and Timothy Matthews have made the hard work seem worthwhile and the effort the least. I thank Stephen for his strong belief in this work and for never failing to remind me of it. His help in every possible form has made life "easier to be lived". His keen intuitions for linguistic structures and enduring passion for music have been sources of inspiration at every step along the way. The arrival of little Timothy, a bundle of endless fun and surprises, has added much spice to our life and opened new vistas in language acquisition.