This book is a substantially revised version of my PhD dissertation completed in December 1997 at the Department of Linguistics, McGill University, under the direction of Professor Lydia White. My greatest debt is to my advisors Lisa Travis and Lydia White for all their guidance, interest in my work, and encouragement. I owe special thanks to all the professors, staff, and students at McGill University for excellent teaching, support, friendship, and advice.

Through my McGill years, I have been supported by a McGill Faculty of Graduate Studies and Research J. W. McConnell Major Fellowship and a Fonds pour la Formation de Chercheurs et l'Aide à la Recherche doctoral fellowship, for which I am grateful. I would also like to acknowledge SSHRCC grant #410-93-0897 to Lisa Travis and a SSHRCC grant #410-95-0720 to Lydia White and Nigel Duffield. The research for my thesis could not have been accomplished without the financial assistance of a McGill Faculty of Graduate Studies and Research Thesis Research Grant and the Professional Partnership Programme Travel Award by the Association of Universities and Colleges of Canada, and I thank both institutions.

I have benefited from numerous illuminating discussions with my fellow students and fellow project-members at McGill. I should especially like to thank my co-authors Miwako Uesaka and Tony Pi, but also Mengistu Amberber, Jose Bonneau, Cindy Brown, Dongdong Chen, Joyce Garavito, Makiko and Yahiro Hirakawa, Shunji Inagaki, Takako Kawasaki, Mika Kizu, Martyna Macgreggor, Anna McLaughlan, Silvina Montrul, John Matthews, Jennifer Ormston, Joe Pater, Ileana Paul, Vivianne Phillips, Philippe Prévost, Sharon Rose, O.T. Stewart, and Hidekazu Tanaka. I have profited enormously from the interest in my work and the insightful comments of several linguists in the wider linguistic community: Jonathan Bobaljik, Zeljko Bošćović, Stefan Engelberg, Hana Filip, Steven Franks, Norvin Richards, and especially Angeliek van Hout and Ellen Thompson. Finally, thanks go to my colleagues and students at the University of Iowa Department of Linguistics for the friendly and creative atmosphere with which I am surrounded. Alice Davison and Paula Kempchinsky read and provided great comments on Chapter 3 (and just before Christmas, too), for which I am grateful.

My deep gratitude goes to the participants in the experimental study reported on here: the students at Sofia University, the American College of Sofia, and the high schools in Varna. Testing in Sofia and Varna was made possible by my former colleagues and friends Ani, Diana, Madlen, Pepi, Ralitz, Svetla and Tzonka, as well as the Bulgarian Association of University Women — thank you so much. I would also like to acknowledge the kind cooperation of the Principal and the teachers at the American College of Sofia, and the Principal of the St. Kliment High School in Varna.

I am indebted to William Snyder for his invaluable comments, suggestions, and clarifications in his capacity as an external evaluator of my dissertation and later on as a reviewer for the book manuscript. I wish to express thanks to the editors, Harald Clahsen and Lydia White, for their help with this book, Kees Vaes for his professionalism, and an anonymous reviewer of the manuscript.

Finally, and most importantly, I want to express my deepest love and thanks to my family: my mother and my late father for making me what I am; my best friend and husband Zlatko for unquestionably believing in me and supporting me all the way; and my children Kamen and Bistra for being the perfect children that they are and for bringing me the purest joys of all — the joys of parenthood.
