This book is a revision of my PhD dissertation at the University of Potsdam. First of all, I would like to thank my advisor Jürgen Weissenborn for his help, support and encouragement. I am grateful to the members of my committee Susan Powers, Doug Saddy and Tom Roeper for guidance, stimulating discussions and crucial suggestions throughout my work.

Having in my committee proponents of the Strong Continuity Hypothesis, the Structure Building Hypothesis and Merger Theory for Acquisition and having taken my first course on language acquisition with Harald Clahsen made me realize that it is more interesting to study the development of child grammar in order to derive conclusions which are relevant for the linguistic theory than to stick to a specific acquisition theory and try to prove that this is the ‘right’ one.

My approach on the structure of the Modern Greek DP has been heavily influenced by the work of Artemis Alexiadou, Melita Stavrou and Ianthi Tsimpli, whom I would like to thank for their insightful work and their willingness to discuss their ideas with me.

I am grateful to Ursula Stephany for her suggestions at the beginning of this study and for putting me in touch with Anastasia Christofidou. Without the longitudinal corpus of Christos this book would not have been written. I am indebted to Anastasia Christofidou for trusting me with the corpus of her son and for discussions about the development of his speech. I wish to thank Olga Dougali and Depy Rizou for transcribing the corpus of Christos. Without their work this study would have lasted another three years.

Further back, I wish to thank the people of the University of Athens for giving me the first tools in the field of linguistics. Especially, I would like to thank Elisabeth Kotzia for convincing me to write a linguistics dissertation, Eleni Efthimiou for giving me the first course in Generative Grammar, Friederike Batsalia for showing me that there is more in linguistics than theoretical syntax and Dimitra Theofanopoulou-Kontou for pointing me in the right direction.

This work has been supported through a grant from the Graduiertenkolleg ‘Economy and Complexity of Language’ which is funded by the DFG

(Deutsche Forschungsgemeinschaft). It was a great experience to be part of the Graduiertenkolleg. I would like to thank my teachers at the University of Potsdam and at the Humboldt University in Berlin: Ria de Bleser, Rainer Dietrich, Gisbert Fanselow, Tracy Hall and Chris Wilder, and my former colleagues: Jens Ahrens, Joanna Blaszcak, Heiner Drenhaus, Sylke Eichler, Susann Fischer, Peter Gebert, Roland Hinterhölzl, Dorothee Kaesler, Jürgen Manowsky, Diana Pili, Marzena Rochon, Stephan Schmidt, Jochen Trommer and Tonjes Veenstra for feedback on my work and for moral support.

For some part of this study I was a guest in the Language Acquisition Group of the ZAS in Berlin. I am indebted to Dagmar Bittner for inviting me to the ZAS, and for reading and commenting on parts of this work.

The revisions of this study have been made while I was working at the University of Essex and at the University College London. I am grateful to the Acquisition Group at the University of Essex for valuable discussions and to Harald Clahsen and Heather van der Lely for their support in finishing this book. The recommendations of two anonymous reviewers are very much appreciated, as they have helped me restructure and highlight several aspects of this book.

Last but not least, I would like to thank my parents Evangelos and Eleni Marini and Voula Triantafillidou for their consistent moral support throughout the years of writing this book and beyond.
