This book is a revised version of my PhD thesis completed in 2002 in the Language and Linguistics Department of the University of Essex. My deepest gratitude goes to my supervisor, Roger Hawkins, for his unfailing support. He is a model of professionalism and scholarship and I was very fortunate to work under his supervision. I am also grateful to Martin Atkinson and Aafke Hulk for being my PhD examiners and encouraging me through their questions and comments to explore avenues that I had not previously considered.

Essex University's Language and Linguistics Department is a stimulating academic environment and my interaction with other students and staff there was highly beneficial to my work. I am very grateful to the UK Department for Education and Skills and the University of Essex for the financial support they provided for the completion of this work.

I owe thanks to all the people who collaborated in the empirical study, who are too many to name individually here.

I also wish to express my thanks to the LALD series editors, Lydia White and Harald Clahsen, for making the publication of this book possible. Kees Vaes at John Benjamins deserves a special mention for being very patient and supportive. Comments on the entire version of the manuscript by Lydia White, Julia Herschensohn and an anonymous reviewer were also very helpful and allowed me to make several improvements, for which I am grateful to them. All remaining errors are of course mine.

Finally, I would like to thank Martin and my family for their support and love. This book is dedicated to them, especially to my mother.
