Table of contents

List of tables	XI
List of figures	XII
Preface	XIII
Abbreviations used in glosses	XV
CHAPTER 1
Introduction	1
1.1 The general topic	1
1.2 The theoretical framework	2
1.3 VP ellipsis: particular answers to general questions in acquisition research	11
1.3.1 Ellipsis as anaphora: ellipsis at the syntax and discourse interface	11
1.3.2 Syntactic constraints on VP ellipsis: acquisition of V-to-I movement	16
1.3.3 Interpretation of focus and presuppositions	18
1.4 Overview of the book	19
CHAPTER 2
VPE and the structural and anaphoric properties of minimal answers in EP adult grammar	21
2.1 VPE in EP: a preliminary diagnosis	21
2.2 VPE and null object	33
2.3 VPE and null complement anaphora in EP	39
2.3.1 The distribution of VPE and NCA	40
2.3.2 The distributional overlap of VPE and NCA in EP: a case of structural ambiguity	42
2.3.3 On the distinction between VPE and NCA in EP: extraction and parallelism	50
2.3.4 Against strict morpho-syntactic parallelism	55
2.4 Ellipsis and deep anaphora in minimal answers	59
2.4.1 A brief overview of minimal answers to yes-no questions	59
2.4.2 Structural and anaphoric properties of minimal answers to yes-no questions	61

2.4.2.1	Verbal answers	61
2.4.2.2	Propositional anaphora: SIM and SER	70
2.4.3	Verb reduplication and emphatic affirmation	84
2.5	Ellipsis: licensing and identification	97
2.5.1	Licensing conditions on VPE	98
2.5.2	Identification conditions: Givenness and Focus	100
2.5.2.1	Givenness and VPE	100
2.5.2.2	Givenness and focus	111
2.6	Conclusion	91

CHAPTER 3

Learnability issues in VPE and focus 113

3.1	The syntax/discourse/prosody interface in the resolution of VPE and focus: problems for acquisition	113
3.2	Previous research on the acquisition of VPE	122
3.3	Previous research on the acquisition of focus	126
3.4	Research questions	130
3.5	Methodology	132
3.5.1	EP corpus of spontaneous production	133
3.5.2	Experiment	136

CHAPTER 4

How early can VPE be found? 137

4.1	Early production of verbal answers	137
4.2	Are early verbal answers mere repetition?	140
4.2.1	Some arguments against a repetition explanation	140
4.2.2	The (apparent) problem of “echo” answers	152
4.3	The structure of early verbal answers	157
4.3.1	Verbal answers as evidence for early production of VPE	158
4.3.2	(Apparent) Problems for a VPE as deletion approach (or a problem for the analysis of early verbal answers as VPE)	165
4.3.2.1	A mismatch between first phonologically full and first deleted VPs	165
4.3.2.2	Non-adult knowledge of the distribution of verbal answers	170
4.3.3	Grammatical and extra-grammatical alternative accounts and a solution	174
4.3.3.1	A grammatical account: early VPE as pro	176
4.3.3.2	Extra-grammatical accounts	178

4.3.3.3	Cross-linguistic evidence	179
4.3.3.4	A solution: a processing and grammatical account	189
4.4	Other VPE structures in early production	191
4.4.1	Confirmation of preceding utterances	192
4.4.2	Emphatic affirmation as a VPE context	194
4.5	VPE is early evidence for V-to-I raising	207
4.6	The emergence of sim and SER: why are sim and SER answers later?	211
4.7	Early verbal answers in EP: synthesis of the account and consequences for the syntax – discourse interface	222

CHAPTER 5

Answers as a window into the interpretation of questions		225
5.1	Children's errors concerning the distribution of verbal answers	225
5.2	The experimental setting	227
5.3	Truth value results: two major response patterns	236
5.4	Pattern 1 – The default focus reading	239
5.4.1	The NSR and the default focus reading	239
5.4.2	Why don't other explanations account for the data?	241
5.4.2.1	The Semantic Subset Principle	241
5.4.2.2	Reference Set Computation	244
5.5	Pattern 2	246
5.5.1	Children's problems interpreting presuppositions	248
5.5.2	Patterson et al.'s explanation	248
5.6	The co-existence of "default focus" and "presupposition difficulty"	250
5.7	Type of answer results	251
5.8	Additional evidence: a small follow-up study	253
5.9	Back to the spontaneous production data	257
5.9.1	Spontaneous production of só	257
5.9.2	Spontaneous production and an adverb analysis of só	260
5.9.3	Spontaneous production of clefts	262
5.10	Summary and concluding remarks	269

CHAPTER 6

Conclusions		271
6.1	Summary of main results	271
6.2	Questions for future research	277
6.2.1	Crosslinguistic comparisons	277
6.2.2	Comprehension of VPE	278
6.2.3	Production/comprehension of other types of silent anaphora (e.g., Stripping, Pseudo-stripping, Sluicing)	278

6.2.4	Interpretation of só 'only' in sentences with marked word-orders	278
6.2.5	Adverbial answers in EP adult syntax and in first stages of acquisition	280
6.2.6	Argument drop in EP adult syntax	281
