Introduction	XI
Theoretically oriented acquisition studies: The state of the art in Italian	XI
The different modes of acquisition	XII
Some general assumptions of linguistic analysis	XIII
PART 1. The acquisition of morphosyntactic properties
CHAPTER 1
The acquisition of verb inflections and clause structure	3
1.1 Introduction	3
1.2 Acquisition of verbal tenses	6
1.3 Acquisition of present tense inflections	7
1.4 The process of subject-verb agreement	10
1.5 Acquisition of the finite versus infinitive verb distinction	13
1.6 Why aren't there any root infinitives in early Italian?	14
1.7 Imperatives as the Italian analogue of root infinitives	16
1.8 Copula	21
1.8.1 Descriptive facts and generalizations	21
1.8.2 An account of the declarative versus wh -question asymmetry in copula omission	25
1.8.3 The copula in negative contexts	26
1.9 Compound tenses and optional past participles	27
1.10 Past participles: Verbal or adjectival nature?	31
1.11 Regular and irregular past participles and past definite	32
1.12 The 'imperfetto'	34
1.13 Acquisition of verb inflections in children with SLI and Developmental Dyslexia	38
Summary and questions for future research	43
CHAPTER 2
The acquisition of articles and aspects of nominal inflection	47
2.1 Introduction	47
2.2 The L1 acquisition of articles	50
2.3 Article use in Italian keeping an eye on the crosslinguistic dimension	54
2.4 Article omission and phonological constraints	56
2.5 Article omission and the syntactic context: The subject-object asymmetry in Italian	60

2.6	An attempt towards a multi-facet explanation	62
2.7	Article omission in non-initial positions: Complement of prepositions	68
2.8	Acquisition of articles in the bilingual children and adult L2 learners	69
2.9	Article omission in children with Specific Language Impairment	71
2.10	The acquisition of nominal inflection in children with typical development and in children with SLI	74
2.11	Morphological derivation: The diminutive	77
	Summary and questions for future research	79

CHAPTER 3

	The acquisition of pronominal clitics	81
3.1	Introduction	81
3.2	Clitics in L1 Italian	86
3.2.1	Clitic omission in early Italian productions	86
3.2.2	Is the unexpressed object an omitted clitic or a null-object?	90
3.2.3	Italian clitics and past participle agreement	97
3.3	Clitics in L2: Bilingual/Child L2 Italian and Adult L2 Italian	100
3.4	Italian clitics in atypical development	108
3.4.1	Clitics in SLI: Clitics as markers of language impairment	108
3.4.2	Clitics in children with cochlear implant	114
3.4.3	Clitics in children with Developmental Dyslexia	116
3.5	The comprehension of object clitics by monolingual children acquiring Italian	117
	Summary and questions for future research	125

CHAPTER 4

	The acquisition of passive voices	129
4.1	Introduction	129
4.1.1	The derivation of passive	132
4.2	The production of Italian passive sentences in typically developing monolingual children	133
4.2.1	Notes on si -causative passive in young children	142
4.3	Some results from comprehension in monolingual children	145
	Summary and questions for future research	148

PART 2. The acquisition of some (discourse) interface properties

CHAPTER 5

	The acquisition of relative clauses	153
5.1	Introduction	153
5.2	Production	157

5.2.1	The production of subject and object relatives in typically developing children	157
5.2.2	The production of Passive Object Relatives in children	162
5.2.3	The production of Passive Object Relatives in adults in comparison with children of different ages	164
5.2.4	The position and nature of the subject in the object relatives produced by children	165
5.3	The comprehension of subject and object relatives in typically developing children	170
5.3.1	Intervention and feature mismatch in the comprehension of object relatives	173
5.3.1.1	The comprehension of object relative and number mismatch	175
5.3.1.2	The comprehension of object relatives and gender mismatch	177
5.4	Toward interpreting children's development: Intervention and the locality of syntactic dependencies	180
5.4.1	Feature mismatch and the grammatical status of morphosyntactic features	184
5.4.2	Number feature and pronouns as relative heads or subjects: Comprehension and production	186
5.4.3	Passive and intervention: PORs in elicited production	189
5.5	The acquisition of Subject and Object relatives in special circumstances: In children with SLI, with developmental dyslexia, in autistic children, in hearing impaired children, in adult L2 acquisition	192
	Summary and questions for future research	198

CHAPTER 6

The acquisition of Wh-questions

203

6.1	Introduction	203
6.2	The L1 acquisition of wh-questions	207
6.3	Comprehension of subject and object wh-questions	209
6.4	Production of subject and object questions with reversible verbs	212
6.5	Some reflections of comprehension and production of Italian wh-questions in a cross-linguistic perspective	216
6.6	Why are Italian wh-questions hard?	218
6.7	How many interference processes?	224
6.8	Wh-questions in children with SLI or Developmental Dyslexia	226
	Summary and questions for future research	228

CHAPTER 7

The acquisition of the syntax and interpretation of subjects	231
7.1 Introduction	231
7.2 Null and overt subjects in typically developing children	238
7.2.1 More on post-verbal subjects in typically developing children according to verb classes and definiteness	241
7.3 Subjects in different populations	247
7.3.1 Considerations on null subjects in SLI	247
7.3.2 Post-verbal and null subjects in (adult) L2	247
7.3.2.1 Post-verbal new information subjects	247
7.3.2.1.1 Post-verbal subjects with unaccusatives	251
7.3.2.2 Null and overt pronominal subjects in (adult) L2 with reference to attrition	252
7.3.3 Overt and null subjects in bilinguals	255
Summary and questions for future research	260

CHAPTER 8

The acquisition of aspects of Italian compositional semantics and of semantic-pragmatic interface	263
8.1 Introduction	263
8.2 Quantifiers in early speech	267
8.3 The acquisition of scope interactions	268
8.4 Principle C, quantification and reconstruction	273
8.5 Pragmatic knowledge: The case of scalar implicatures	275
8.5.1 Italian adults and children's interpretation of "or"	276
8.5.2 Italian adults and children's interpretation of "some"	277
8.5.3 Some prerequisites for generating Scalar Implicatures	278
8.5.4 Experimental manipulations matter... to some extent	281
8.5.5 Children are not underinformative speakers	283
8.5.6 Where are we?	283
8.5.7 Conversational understanding in bilingual children	284
8.5.8 Pragmatic skills in children with specific language impairments	288
8.5.9 Taking stock. Why are children more logical than adults?	288
8.6 Gradable adjectives	290
Summary and open questions for future research	294
Conclusion	297
The contribution of studies on the acquisition of Italian	297
