Work on the research program that eventually became this book spanned nearly a decade, and I am deeply grateful to the inimitable Linguistics faculty at the University of California Santa Cruz, in particular Jim McCloskey, Judith Aissen, Sandra Chung, and Jorge Hankamer. I am especially indebted to Jim for his incredible insight, patience, interest, and attention through many versions of the analyses presented here. To my peers at UCSC I also owe thanks: Pete Alrenga, Vera Lee-Schoenfeld, Anne Sturgeon, Irena Polic Richter, Chris Potts, Line Mikkelsen, Ascander Dost, Dylan Herrick, Nathan Sanders, Anya Lunden, Lynsey Wolter, Kyle Rawlins, Ruth Kramer, and many others.

The talks, papers, drafts, and thoughts that eventually became this book benefited tremendously from the insightful comments of audiences and individuals over the years. I particularly thank Rajesh Bhatt, for his lightning-fast responses to questions, and for his comments, suggestions, and discussions at various stages. I am also grateful to Rakesh Bhatt, Anoop Mahajan, Ben Breuning, Adam Albright, Pranav Anand, Kashi Wali, Theresa Biberauer, Maziar Toosarvandani, Alice Davison, Chris Kennedy, Tanmoy Bhattacharya, Peter Svenonius, Heidi Harley, Ayesha Kidwai and Jason Merchant.

I also owe an enormous debt to my native-speaker informants and their families, who have been patient, helpful, gracious and generous. Thanks goes to Vijay Chowdhury and her family, Pran Kaul, Rakesh Bhatt, Saleem Ali, Uzma Rizvi, Ali Afzal, Adnan Afzal, Chandra and Dev Gupta and their family, Subhan Ali Hunzai and his family, Tabinda Khan, and Khurram Khan. A number of others have also provided important support, including my colleagues in the Program in Linguistics at the University of Vermont, Julie Roberts, Maeve Eberhart, Guillermo Rodriguez, and Jennifer Dickinson. For their careful reading of my work, I am also grateful to the interdisciplinary writing group at UVM, including Danilyn Rutheford, Ben Eastman, Kabir Tambar, Kelda Jamison, Andrea Voyer, and Vicki Brennan.

Finally, I thank my family for their unflagging support and enthusiasm for every stage of this book. Most of all I am grateful to Jonah and Zaki, who mean everything to me.
