Fieldwork for this study was partly funded by a short-term doctoral student's grant from the German Academic Exchange Service (DAAD), for which I am grateful. I wish to thank all informants at the University of the West Indies Mona in Jamaica who made this study possible by allowing me to read and cite their personal e-mail. Clive Forrester and Joseph Farquharson are not only among them, but also continued their support for the project practically throughout the whole writing process, giving me native-speaker's advice and commenting whenever I contacted them via e-mail. I am also deeply indebted to the Department of Language, Linguistics and Philosophy at the University of the West Indies Mona. Hubert Devonish, Kathryn Shields-Brodber, Michelle Bryan-Ennis, and Keren Niles were wonderfully helpful and cooperative hosts during my two visits for fieldwork there. – Aside from those already mentioned, and Christian Mair, who was an inspiring, supportive, and thorough PhD supervisor at every stage, several linguists provided valuable advice and corrections on various aspects of the thesis: Andrea Sand, Dagmar Deuber, Naomi Baron, Peter Auer, Peter Patrick, Jannis Androutsopoulos, Armin Schwegler, and Carol Myers-Scotton. – Marzia Milazzo supplied the photograph (Figure 4). – Claudia Kohler drew my attention to alternative interpretations of the Bible passages cited in chapter 5. – Liza Veldhuis, Katharina Böhm, and Ulf Gerdemann were very helpful and unforgiving proofreaders; all remaining errors are of course my own. – My parents' contribution is possibly the greatest, and the hardest to gauge. I thank them for all their support through the years.
