This book owes a debt of gratitude to several people. First and foremost, I would like to express my sincere thanks to Klaus P. Schneider for his constructive feedback on the book, for his support and encouragement throughout and also – particularly in the later stages – for giving me the time necessary to write this book.

This is a revised version of a manuscript submitted as a Habilitationsschrift, i.e. as a post-doctoral thesis, to the University of Bonn. I would like to extend my gratitude to the members of my post-doctoral committee, Klaus P. Schneider, Jürgen Esser, Marion Gymnich, Manfred Kohrt, Rolf Kreyer, Franz Lebsanft, Daniela Pirazzini, Karl Reichl, and Caja Thimm for their feedback. I am grateful furthermore to the audiences of numerous talks and conferences for interesting observations, to several colleagues in Bonn, Frankfurt, and Lüneburg for rewarding discussions and also to Anita Fetzer, Series Editor, and to two anonymous reviews for valuable comments on the text. Furthermore, I would like to express a very special thanks to all of those students in Bonn and Frankfurt who were involved in coding debates.

This study would not have been possible without the generous support of numerous ministries and advertising agencies in Germany and Ireland who put campaign materials at my disposal and who gave me a broader understanding of the communicative context in which the campaigns ran. To those individuals I wish to express my thanks.

Furthermore, I wish to thank Susanne Strubel-Burgdorf for very competently taking charge of the bibliography and, together with Fanny Bates and Franziska Nitsch, for also helping to prepare the present manuscript. Many thanks also to Isja Conen of John Benjamins for her efficiency and support in this project.

Finally, a big thanks to my parents and Hilda for their continual support, and last, but by no means least, to Frank, a very big thank you for his interest and encouragement, but most of all for talking sense in times of need, and along with Fionn and Leah for always managing to put things in perspective!
