The research presented in this book is derived largely from my PhD thesis, which was funded by scholarships and bursaries I received from the Overseas Research Student (ORS) fund, the Faculty of Arts, and the Department of English Language at the University of Glasgow. I would like to express special respect and gratitude to Doctors Jeremy J. Smith and Alison Wiggins for the guidance, supervision and encouragement they provided for this project. And for their valuable feedback, thank you to my PhD examiners, Doctors Robert Maslen (Glasgow) and Irma Taavitsainen (Helsinki). I would also like to thank my new colleagues at University of Sheffield for being so excellent (meant with all its American English polysemy) – it's made the difference in finishing this book during a busy first year! A journal article (Journal of Historical Pragmatics, 2010) has been published using material taken from Chapter 7 of this book, and a book chapter (Boydell and Brewer 2010) derived from part of Chapter 3. I would like to thank the anonymous reviewers of both of these previous publications for their helpful comments, which have also fed into the revision of material for this book. Transforming my thesis into a book has been a process, and I am grateful to the readers, editors and production team at John Benjamins for all their invaluable help and support along the way.

But especially to Mom and Dad, my sister, Jessie, and my girlfriend, Christina – you guys are the greatest.

Oh, and to Shulamith, the cat: a fine reading companion, now living the highlife after I left her behind to come to Britain in the first place.
