Many people deserve my thanks for helping me at various stages of this work, either at a professional or emotional level. Firstly, I would like to thank Dr Patricia Odber de Baubeta who encouraged me to pursue a PhD and so generously supported me throughout it. Secondly, I would like to acknowledge the University of Sheffield under whose auspices I completed the PhD on which this work is based.

I would also like to express my sincere thanks to all the students in England and Uruguay who made this study possible by participating as informants. I should also record a special thanks to those colleagues in England and Uruguay who kindly allowed me to use their students and their premises for the study.

I would also like to thank my family and friends in England and Uruguay for their continual encouragement. I would like to record a special thanks to Tim Jacobs for his patience in reading the manuscript.

And, finally, and most importantly, I would like to record my debt and gratitude to my partner, Malcolm, for his never-tiring love and support.
