Acknowledgements

This book is based upon my PhD dissertation, Collocations in the English of Advanced Learners. A Study Based on a Learner Corpus, which was accepted by the Philosophisch-Historische Fakultät of the University of Basel in August 2003. I would like to thank my supervisors, David J. Allerton and Christian Mair, for their warm support throughout the writing process and beyond. David Allerton gave most generously of his time to discuss all aspects of my work and also alerted me to many subtleties in the areas of phraseology and syntax. Christian Mair introduced me to corpus linguistics and stimulated my interest in linguistics in the first place.

Numerous other people also provided helpful comments on earlier versions and stimulating ideas for my research. I am particularly grateful to Stefan Hanke, Nuria Hernandez, Andreas Langlotz, Iman Laversuch, Michelle Miles, Ute Römer, Tamsin Sanderson, John Sinclair, Pius ten Hacken, Cornelia Tschichold, Ursula Weinberger, and the anonymous reviewer. Any remaining flaws are of course my own.

I would like to thank Gunter Lorenz, Sylviane Granger and the staff of the Centre for English Corpus Linguistics at the University of Louvain, especially Sylvie De Cock, who kindly integrated me into the ICLE (the International Corpus of Learner English) project at a late stage. Thanks also go to the students at the University of Basel who contributed essays to ICLE and to Joyce Bachmann for help with the essay collection. I am grateful to the native speakers who provided native speaker judgements, in particular to Peter Burleigh, the students from the Institute of European Studies in Freiburg and the U.S. Naval Academy in Annapolis, Maryland, and to those who helped me recruit native speaker informants, in particular Siri Caltvedt, Chris Everard, William Fletcher, Viviane Klein, Ulrich Lohrmann and Andrew Shields.

For providing generous grants, which enabled me to attend conferences related to the topic, I am grateful to the University of Basel, in particular the Department of English, and to the “Improving Human Potential” scheme of the European Union.

I also wish to thank Elena Tognini-Bonelli for including the book in the series Studies in Corpus Linguistics, and both her and the team at Benjamins, in particular Kees Vaes, for a friendly and efficient publishing process.

On a more personal level, I would like to express my deepest thanks to my parents, friends, and especially my husband, Stefan, for the various kinds of support I have received from them while working on this book.
