I am very much indebted to my academic teacher and supervisor Wolf-Dietrich Bald, who was always supportive of my work, enthusiastic about my ideas, and a constant source of motivation. I would have wished he could have seen this study completed. To him the book is dedicated. Many thanks are also due to Rainer Schulze and Bernhard Kettemann for their advice, support, and encouragement, especially when things got tough.

I am grateful to the University of Cologne, the German Academic Exchange Service (DAAD), the European Commission, and the German Research Foundation (DFG) for providing me with scholarships and travel grants, and to HarperCollins publishers and The University of Birmingham for permission to access The Bank of English. Special thanks must go to David Oakey for countless helpful comments and suggestions on the whole manuscript and to John Sinclair for his invaluable feedback on parts of the book.

I would also like to thank the conference delegates at IVACS 2002 in Limerick, TaLC 2002 in Bertinoro, ICAME 2003 in Guernsey, ICAME 2004 in Verona, and TaLC 2004 in Granada for their helpful comments, stimulating questions, and supportive feedback after my presentations. The same applies to the participants at the Tuscan Word Centre courses in April 2000 and October 2001. Particular thanks go to the organisers of these expert training courses, Elena Tognini-Bonelli and John Sinclair, and to the ‘guru’ of the April 2000 course, Stig Johansson, for helping me find my way and for keeping me on track. It is a privilege to be introduced to corpus linguistics by some of the most original and open-minded thinkers in the field.

The following colleagues and friends deserve a big thankyou for their encouragement and support, for their interest in my work, and for countless “keep going” emails: Michael Barlow, Linda Bawcom, Ylva Berglund, Pernilla Danielsson, Anna Mauranen, Nadja Nesselhauf, David Oakey, Hanna Pishwa, Norbert Schlüter, Colin Wilcockson, and Chris Williams. On a similar note, my thanks go to a number of friends and colleagues in the English Department at the University of Cologne, not only from the linguistics but also from the literature side.

Last, but certainly not least, I wish to thank my parents Anita and Peter, my sister Anja, and my partner Karsten for their constant support, their endless patience, and for always being there.
