CHAPTER 1

Introduction and overview 1

1.1 Introduction 1

1.2 Structural nativization in Indian English lexicogrammar: Preview 2

CHAPTER 2

Aspects of structural nativization 5

2.1 From English in India to Indian English 5

2.2 Models of World Englishes: The situation of Indian English today 7

2.2.1 Static and dynamic models of World Englishes 7

2.2.2 Indian English in the dynamic evolutionary model: Aspects of ongoing nativization and endonormative stabilization 11

2.3 Different influences on structural nativization 15

CHAPTER 3

Aspects of lexicogrammar: Collocation and verb-complementation 17

3.1 Introduction – The interdependence of lexis and grammar 17

3.2 Collocation 19

3.2.1 Introduction 19

3.2.2 Quantitative approaches to collocations 19

3.2.3 Phraseological approaches to collocations 24

3.2.4 Collocations in Indian English 26

3.2.5 Collocation in the lexis-grammar continuum 27

3.3 Verb-complementation 27

3.3.1 Introduction 27

3.3.2 Verb-complementation in descriptive grammar (Quirk et al. 1985) and corpus-based descriptive grammar (Biber et al. 1999) 28

3.3.3 Verb-complementation in cognitive grammar and construction grammar 32

3.3.4 Verb-complementation in Indian English 36

CHAPTER 4
Methodology 41
4.1 Introduction: A corpus-based description of structural nativization in Indian English lexicogrammar 41
4.2 Corpora and tools 42
4.2.1 The International Corpus of English – The British and Indian components (ICE-GB and ICE-India) 42
4.2.2 The Times of India corpus 44
4.2.3 Corpus analysis software: WordSmith Tools V4.x 48
4.3 Verb-complementational profiles 49
4.4 Collocational profiles 54
4.5 Verbs under scrutiny: GIVE, SEND and OFFER – A quantitative overview 57
4.6 Summary 62

CHAPTER 5
GIVE 63
5.1 Introduction: GIVE as a prototypical ditransitive verb 63
5.2 Distribution of complementation patterns in different text categories 66
5.3 Verb-complementational patterns of GIVE in spoken Indian and British English 69
5.4 Verb-complementational patterns of GIVE in written Indian and British English 76
5.5 Collocational profiles of GIVE in Indian and British English 84
5.6 GIVE: A brief summary 92

CHAPTER 6
SEND 95
6.1 Introduction: SEND as a less-prototypical ditransitive verb 95
6.2 An overview of the verb-complementation patterns of SEND in ICE-GB and ICE-India 97
6.3 Distribution of complementation patterns in different text categories 100
6.4 Verb-complementational patterns of SEND in spoken Indian and British English 102
6.5 Verb-complementational patterns of SEND in written Indian and British English 104
6.6 SEND in the International Corpus of English: A synopsis 109
6.7 Verb-complementational patterns of SEND in Indian and British newspaper English 110

6.8 Collocational profiles of SEND in Indian and British newspaper English 117
6.9 SEND in Indian and British newspaper English: A brief summary 128

CHAPTER 7
OFFER 129
7.1 Introduction: OFFER as a low-frequency ditransitive verb 129
7.2 Verb-complementational patterns of OFFER in spoken and written Indian and British English 131
7.3 OFFER in British and Indian newspaper English 132
7.4 Collocational profiles of OFFER in Indian and British newspaper English 133
7.5 OFFER: A brief summary 144
7.6 Analysis of GIVE, SEND and OFFER – Concluding remarks 146

CHAPTER 8
Evaluation and discussion 147
8.1 Introduction 147
8.2 Evaluation of the analysis 148
8.2.1 Corpora and software 148
8.2.2 Verb-complementational patterns 152
8.2.3 Collocational profiles 155
8.3 Discussion 158
8.3.1 Introduction 158
8.3.2 O_d-collocate analysis and collostructional analysis 161
8.3.3 Lexicogrammatical variation in varieties of English 161
8.4 Towards a model of lexicogrammatical nativization 163

CHAPTER 9
Conclusion and prospects for future research 171
9.1 Conclusion 171
9.2 Prospects for future research 173
