

Acknowledgements

 <https://doi.org/10.1075/scl.6.01ack>

Pages xi–xii of

Corpus Linguistics at Work

Elena Tognini-Bonelli

[Studies in Corpus Linguistics, 6] 2001. xii, 224 pp.

© John Benjamins Publishing Company

This electronic file may not be altered in any way. For any reuse of this material written permission should be obtained from the publishers or through the Copyright Clearance Center (for USA: www.copyright.com).

For further information, please contact rights@benjamins.nl or consult our website at benjamins.com/rights

Acknowledgements

In attempting the task of putting together a full-length book on the uses of corpora in language work I have been greatly encouraged by several distinguished colleagues, whose gentle pressure counterbalanced more mundane demands on my discretionary time. I must particularly mention Maurizio Gotti, Rema Rossini Favretti and Carol Taylor Torsello, my mentors in Italy, and Wolfgang Teubert, my collaborator in the series I edit and the journal he edits; their faith in me moved mountains and their example inspired me when I felt overburdened.

A word of thanks is due to the people who allow the availability of corpora for research and specifically when the corpora are the result of a corporate effort often involving a commercial partner; this was more the case in the early days of corpus work and less now that corpora can be assembled fairly easily. However, large holdings such as the Bank of English are still beyond the efforts of individual scholars. Now that Bank of English is available to scholars from all over the world through the web, one may forget that only a few years ago this was not so. Without the generosity of these people many of the early studies in corpus linguistics would have been severely limited. This volume, for a start, would have probably never seen the light.

Here, I would like to express my thanks specifically to Jeremy Clear, former Director of Cobuild, for support in access to the corpora of the Bank of English and Antonio Zampolli, Director of the Istituto di Linguistica Computazionale, Pisa, for access to a corpus of contemporary Italian.

The position outlined in this volume was at the basis of my proposal to Benjamins for the series "Studies in Corpus Linguistics" where the volume is published; I am very much indebted to Kees Vaes for his trust at a time when corpus linguistics was not yet fashionable and his continuing support.

In the process of compilation, several colleagues were good enough to read and comment on early versions of some of the chapters and this final version has profited a great deal from their constructive comments and encouragement. In particular I would like to thank Bengt Altenberg, Mona Baker, Geoff Barnbrook, Silvia Bernardini, Chris Butler, Sylviane Granger and Michael Stubbs.

There are copious references to the work of John Sinclair throughout this book because the theoretical framework that I have used is his; in his other role as my husband he cleared time for me and helped and supported me through the periods when I thought the book would never be finished.

