Acknowledgments

First and foremost, I wish to thank all the families that participated in the studies leading to this book. I thank them for their altruistic generosity and for their genuine interest in language acquisition research. Without their participation, none of the studies reported here could have come into being.

Second, I have been fortunate to have access to a large Spanish speaking community in the Syracuse Area, and La Casita Cultural Center and La Liga de Acción Hispana de Onondaga County deserve special mention here for making possible the necessary connection with the community to pursue my research projects. I thank them for their availability and willingness to collaborate.

Many other individuals deserve my deepest gratitude. Among them, all my colleagues and students in the Languages, Literatures and Linguistics Department at Syracuse University who enthusiastically encouraged me and showed great interest in my research. Among the students, special mention deserves those who worked as transcribers for parts of this project. Thanks to Casey Adams, Jonathan Gomez, Iara Mantenuto, and Giselle Winchester, among many others.

Since my first interactions with J. Muñoz-Liceras, W. Snyder and D. Lillo-Martin, many outstanding individuals have contributed to my interests in language acquisition, and all of them deserve my gratitude. Unfortunately, it is impossible to list all the language acquisition researchers who, directly or indirectly, have influenced this work with their comments and feedback. Preliminary results of (parts of) this study were presented at different venues such as the SpanPort Lectures Series at UMass-Amherst, at ISB8-U of Oslo or, more recently, at Bilingualism in the Hispanic and Lusophone World (BHL) at Florida State University. The author is indebted with all the audiences for their insightful discussions. Special thanks are also due to L. Amaral, L. Avram, T. Bhatia, A. Brown, A. De Houwer, R. Fuertes, M. L. Ezeizabarrena, S. Montrul, C. Lleó, L. Reglero, W. Ritchie, M. Rodríguez Mondoñedo, T. Roeper, J. Rothman, J. Villa-García, among others, for their valuable suggestions and comments at different stages of this project.

Finally, thanks are due to three anonymous reviewers for the exceptional feedback that greatly improved previous versions of this manuscript, and to J. Rothman and L. Serratrice, as the co-editors of SiBIL, and to Kees Vaes, in the John Benjamins editorial office, for their patience with this project.

My biggest gratitude, as always, goes to my family.
