Anyone who has ever written a monograph is in debt to ideas and suggestions put forward by different scholars defending different traditions. We would like to express our heartfelt thanks to all of them, especially to the reviewers of the original manuscript who shared with us their insightful knowledge of lexicographic theory and their wisdom as practical lexicographers and helped us to pave the way for this book through enlightening encouragement, suggestions and comments.

Our profound thanks to the editors of the “Terminology and Lexicography Research and Practice” collection and the editorial team at John Benjamins for reading, revising, and making valuable comments on the manuscript, particularly in cases where the manuscript was originally written in Spanish, then translated into English by David Rixham and Terry O’Brian. Our thanks to them.

We would like to express our most heartfelt thanks to Miguel Albillo, who shared with us his computing abilities. Thanks Miguel for editing and preparing the plates and figures.

Finally, our thanks to la Junta de Castilla y León for its financial support.
