CHAPTER 1
The importance of meaning for syntax	1
1. The aim of the book	1
2. A sample of open questions	2
3. Significance of the book	7
4. Content of the present volume	8
CHAPTER 2
Theoretical foundations of the proposed approach	15
1. Introduction	15
2. Semantic structure, functional domain and subdomain	16
3. Languages differ with respect to functional domains, subdomains, and meanings encoded in the grammatical system	18
4. Progressive aspect in English	19
5. Formal consequences of meaning encoded in the grammatical system	24
5.1 Consequences of the choice of forms	24
5.2 Constraints on lexical insertion	27
6. Factors affecting the realization of a meaning encoded in the grammatical system	28
6.1 Choice of lexical items affecting the realization of the meaning encoded in the grammatical system	29
6.2 Adverbial modification	30
6.3 The meaning of a lexical item and the benefactive predication	30
7. Interaction between two meanings encoded in the grammatical system	31
8. Principle of functional transparency: Its scope and consequences	32
9. Relationship between meaning encoded in the grammatical system and the structure of the lexicon	37
9.1 The motivation for lexical categories	37
9.2 Lexicalization of the categories 'noun' and 'verb'	39
9.3 Adjectives	40

10. Relationships among the meaning encoded in the grammatical system, the lexicon, and co-occurrence with other meanings encoded in the grammatical system 43
11. Similarities and differences across languages 44
12. Situating the present theory in relationship to other theories 45

CHAPTER 3

Why the meaning encoded in the grammatical system matters 49

1. Introduction 49
2. Locative predication vs. locative expressions 51
3. The evidence 52
  - 3.1 The coding means in locative predications 52
  - 3.2 Inherently locative predicate and inherently locative complement: Coding through juxtaposition 52
  - 3.3 Inherently locative predicate and non-locative argument: Predicate PREP Noun 53
  - 3.4 Non-locative predicate and inherently locative complement: Predicate á Noun 55
  - 3.5 Non-locative predicate and non-locative complement: Predicate PRED PREP Noun 59
4. Consequences of encoding locative predication in the grammatical system: Genitive predication in the locative phrase 61
5. Conclusions 65
  - 5.1 Conclusions concerning Mina 65
  - 5.2 Theoretical conclusions 66

CHAPTER 4

Lexical and morphological coding means and their implications 69

1. Introduction 69
2. Lexical categories, subcategories, and derivational morphology 71
  - 2.1 Lexical categories as a coding means 71
  - 2.2 An open question in lexical categories: Ideophones 73
  - 2.3 Motivation for lexical subcategories 75
3. Verbal extensions 78
4. Conclusions 83

CHAPTER 5

Linear orders as coding means 85

1. Introduction 85
2. Linear order in linguistic theory 86

3. Linear order as a formal domain 88
4. Default position for a lexical or grammatical category 89
5. The SV word order in English as a coding means 90
6. Coding by position 93
7. Coding by position in English 94
8. Position before the auxiliary or verb in French 97
9. Alternations in the default linear coding and the coding by position 98
10. Relative order as a coding means 100
11. Linear precedence 102
12. Conclusions 105

CHAPTER 6

A methodology for the discovery of meanings encoded in the grammatical system

107

1. Questions the methodology aims to address 107
2. Discovery of coding means 107
  - 2.1 Discovery of lexical items with grammatical functions 108
  - 2.2 Discovery of structures 110
3. Structural function versus meaning 111
  - 3.1 Retention of the word-final vowel in Wandala 111
  - 3.2 Complementizers 'that' in English and że in Polish 113
4. Discovery of meaning 114
  - 4.1 General principles 114
  - 4.2 Reminder of theoretical assumptions 115
  - 4.3 Discovering the domain: Lack of co-occurrence with other markers 116
  - 4.4 Determining the function of the form: Coordinating conjunctions in English and Polish 118
  - 4.5 The search for the function of the form doesn't have to be haphazard 120
  - 4.6 The test of omission 121
  - 4.7 The study of the distribution of a form 123
5. Search for other structures belonging to the same domain 127
6. The distinctive feature of a function 131
7. Two tools in semantic argumentation: Internal contradiction and tautology 132
8. A practical matter: The role of questionnaires in the discovery of forms and functions 134
9. Conclusions 135

CHAPTER 7

The distinction between the meaning encoded in the grammatical system and inferences from utterances

137

1. Aim and scope of the chapter 137
2. 'Affect' and 'affectedness' in linguistic literature 137
3. Background information about the structure of Mina 140
4. The question: A structure whose function is not obvious 141
5. Discourse function of the structure m V-yi 142
6. The semantic role of the subject and the structure m V-yi 143
  - 6.1 Affectedness with intransitive verbs 144
  - 6.2 Affectedness with inherently transitive verbs 147
7. Affectedness predication and the part-whole relationship 150
8. When the affectedness marking cannot be used 153
9. Conclusions and implications 157

CHAPTER 8

Indirectly affected argument, benefactive, and malefactive

159

1. Introduction 159
2. State of the art 160
3. Indirectly affected argument predication 162
4. The indirectly affected argument predication in Lele 167
5. English recipient/benefactive function 170
6. Relationship between the benefactive and goal functions in English 173
7. Malefactive predication 175
8. Conclusions 176

CHAPTER 9

The clause and the meanings encoded in the grammatical system

179

1. The goal of the chapter 179
2. Clausal structure in linguistic theory 180
3. Functions at the level of the clause 183
4. The category point of view of the subject 184
  - 4.1 Introduction 184
  - 4.2 Arguments against the coreferentiality function 184
  - 4.3 Point of view of the subject and the marker się 188
  - 4.4 Summary of the point of view of the subject in Polish 191
  - 4.5 Point of view of the subject in Hdi 192
5. Goal orientation 195
  - 5.1 Introduction 195

5.2	Implications of the coding of source/subject orientation and goal in Hdi	198
6.	Thetic predication 1 in Polish	198
7.	Thetic predication in Wandala: Nominal subject as adjunct	200
8.	Constraining the scope of the event: Absence of a goal	203
9.	Conclusions	205

CHAPTER 10

Clausal predications in English		207
1.	The coding means of English	207
2.	The existential predications	208
3.	Equational predications	210
4.	Attributive predication	211
5.	The intransitive predications	212
6.	Transitive predication	212
7.	Passive predication in English	213
8.	Benefactive predication	217
9.	Thetic predication	218
10.	Conclusions	219

CHAPTER 11

Clausal predications in Polish		221
1.	Introduction: The formal means of coding	221
2.	Equational predication	222
3.	Identificational predication	223
4.	Thetic predication 2	224
5.	Intransitive dynamic predication	225
6.	Goal and non-goal predication	227
7.	Indirectly affected argument predication	233
8.	Passive predication	234
9.	Conclusions about Polish	235

CHAPTER 12

Clausal predications in Wandala		237
1.	The formal means of Wandala	237
2.	Affirmative existential predication	238
3.	Negative existential predication	239
4.	Possessive predication	239
5.	Locative predication	241

6. Equational predication 242
7. Presentative predication 243
8. Grammatical roles of nouns following constituents other than the verb 244
9. Semantic relations of nouns following the verb 245
  - 9.1 The form of the verb 245
  - 9.2 Transitive events under subject control 247
  - 9.3 Non-affected subject non-affected object predication 249
  - 9.4 Affected-subject predication 250
10. The goal marker á and verbal predications 252
11. Indirectly affected argument predication 254
12. The point of view predication 256
13. Conclusions about clausal predication in Wandala 261

CHAPTER 13

Towards a non-aprioristic typology of functional categories 263

1. Various uses of typological research 263
2. The object of typology with respect to grammatical categories 264
3. 'Conceptual' or 'cognitive' categories 265
  - 3.1 The basic assumptions 265
  - 3.2 Sources of 'cognitive/conceptual' or 'comparative' categories 266
4. A typology without 'comparative concepts' 269
5. How to determine whether forms in different languages code the same or different functions 270
  - 5.1 The simplest case 271
  - 5.2 The importance of functional domain 271
  - 5.3 The defining feature and properties of the predication 272
  - 5.4 A major issue: How to choose among several features 274
6. What will a typology of functional categories will look like? 276
7. Typology of clausal predications in the three languages 277
8. Discussion and conclusions 279

CHAPTER 14

Conclusions, implications, and open questions 281

1. Introduction 281
2. Coding means versus functions 281
3. Semantic structure of individual languages 283
4. Discovery of meaning 284
5. Realization of meaning and the role of syntax 285

- 6. A few questions and the proposed answers   286
- 7. Cross-linguistic similarities and differences   288
- 8. Open questions   289
