Grammatical Relations
and their Non-Canonical Encoding in Baltic

Valency, Argument Realization and Grammatical Relations in Baltic (VARGReB)

This series of five volumes is the outcome of a research project coordinated by Vilnius University, aiming at bundling research efforts of scholars from different countries in the domain of the Baltic languages (Lithuanian and Latvian). Baltic linguistics has long been fraught with a strong diachronic bias, but there is now a growing body of theoretically and typologically informed work on these languages. The series focuses on a core domain of Baltic grammar, viz. that of clausal architecture, case marking and grammatical relations, and the syntax-semantic interface. In addition to three collections of articles the series will also comprise two monographs, dealing with copular sentences and argument alternations respectively. The first volume to appear in the series is concerned with non-canonical grammatical relations in Baltic. The next volumes will deal with a variety of issues in the domain of valency and argument realization.
