Foreword to the 1979 edition	XIII
Preface to the 1979 edition	XV
Preface to the revised edition	XIX

CHAPTER 1

Fact, method and explanation: On the recalcitrant legacy of structuralism	1
1.1 Orientation	1
1.2 Saussure's firewall	2
1.3 Structuralism and the philosophy of science	4
1.4 The three dogmas of structuralism	7
1.4.1 Arbitrariness	7
1.4.2 Idealization: Langue vs. parole	8
1.4.3 Segregation: Synchrony vs. diachrony	8
1.5 Latter-day structuralism	10
1.6 Explanatory biology: Aristotle revisited	11
1.7 Synchrony as diachrony	14
1.7.1 Example: The diachronic typology of passive constructions	15
1.7.2 The diachronic provenance of synchronic structural properties	19
1.7.3 Grammatical relations in the passive clause	21
1.8 Closure	22
Abbreviations of grammatical terms	24

CHAPTER 2

Toward a discourse definition of syntax:
The communicative correlates of grammar	25
2.1 Antecedence	25
2.2 The role of grammar in human information processing	27
2.2.1 Overview: The functional organization of language	27
2.2.2 The conceptual lexicon	28
2.2.3 Propositional information	29
2.2.4 Multi-propositional discourse	29
2.2.5 The interaction between words, propositions and discourse	29

2.3	The communicative function of grammar	32
2.3.1	Grammar as a structural code	33
2.3.2	Grammar as communicative function	35
2.4	Theme-and-variation in syntax and the markedness of clause-types	36
2.4.1	Overview	36
2.4.2	Theme and variations in syntax	37
2.4.3	The text-frequency distribution of major clause-types	39
2.5	The grammar of referential coherence	40
2.5.1	Preliminaries	40
2.5.2	Discourse structure and referential coherence	41
2.5.3	High-continuity devices	44
2.5.4	Low continuity devices	46
2.5.5	Quantitative text-distribution of referent-coding devices	49
2.5.6	Word order and referential continuity	55
2.6	Cataphoric aspects of topicality	61
2.6.1	Methodological preliminaries	61
2.6.2	Indefiniteness and cataphoric topicality	63
2.6.2.1	The semantics of reference	63
2.6.2.2	The numeral 'one' as an indefinite marker in Modern Hebrew	67
2.6.2.3	The numeral 'one' as an indefinite marker in Krio	70
2.6.2.4	The demonstrative 'this' as an indefinite marker in English	73
2.7	Voice constructions and cataphoric topicality	75
2.7.1	Anaphoric vs. cataphoric zero	75
2.7.2	The functional domain of pragmatic voice	76
2.7.3	Cataphoric zero in passive clauses	78
2.7.3.1	Prelude: Typology and functional domains	78
2.7.3.2	The diachrony of the zeroed-out agents in non-promotional passives	79
2.7.3.3	Diachrony of the zeroed-out agents in promotional passives	82
2.8	Cataphoric zero in antipassive clauses	85
2.8.1	Functional definition of antipassive voice	85
2.8.2	A diachronic typology of zero in antipassives	86
2.8.3	Zero, incorporation, and the rise of antipassive morphology	88
2.9	Closure	91
	Abbreviation of grammatical terms	92

4.3.3	The cross-language typology of REL-clauses	129
4.3.3.1	Preamble: The case-role recoverability problem	129
4.3.3.2	The zero-cum-gap strategy: Japanese	130
4.3.3.3	Clause chaining and anaphoric pronouns: Bambara and Hittite	131
4.3.3.4	The anaphoric pronoun or pronominal agreement strategy: Hebrew	134
4.3.3.5	Nominalized REL-clauses: Ute	136
4.3.3.6	Case-marked demonstrative pronouns and Y-movement: German	140
4.3.3.7	The verb-coding relativization strategy	143
4.4	Discussion	149
	Abbreviations of grammatical terms	149
CHAPTER 5
	From discourse to syntax: Grammar as an automated processing strategy	151
5.1	Introduction	151
5.2	Diachrony and syntacticization	153
5.2.1	Overview	153
5.2.2	From topic to subject	154
5.2.3	From topicalization to passivization	155
5.2.4	From conjoined clauses to embedded relative clause	156
5.2.5	From conjoined to embedded verb complements	159
5.2.6	Resultative verb compounds in Mandarin	160
5.2.7	Complex possessive constructions	161
5.2.8	Focus clauses and WH-questions	162
5.2.9	From clause-chaining to serial-verb clauses	162
5.2.10	Interim summary	164
5.3	Pidgin vs. Creole language	165
5.4	Child vs. adult language	166
5.5	Oral informal vs. formal written language	168
5.6	Discussion	170
5.6.1	Coding modalities and developmental trends	170
5.6.2	The diachronic cycle	171
5.6.3	Diachrony and typological diversity	171
5.6.4	Universality, evolution and explanation	171
5.6.5	Grammar as an automated processing strategy	172
5.6.6	Postscript	172
	Abbreviation of grammatical terms	173

CHAPTER 6

Where does crazy syntax come from?	175
6.1 Introduction	175
6.2 Crazy synchronic phonology	178
6.3 Case studies	179
6.3.1 The Kimbundu passive revisited	179
6.3.2 The Kihungan cleft and WH-question revisited	180
6.3.3 German REL-clauses revisited	183
6.3.4 Some unintended consequences of compressing chained clauses into serial-verb clauses	185
6.3.5 German word-order and tense-aspect renovation	189
6.3.6 The Romance and Bantu object pronouns	191
6.3.7 No. Uto-Aztecan nominalized subordinate clauses	193
6.4 Discussion	197
6.4.1 Naturalness: Commonality vs. ease of processing	197
6.4.2 The temporal curve of the diachronic cycle	198
6.4.3 Naturalness: Synchrony vs. diachrony	199
Abbreviation of grammatical terms	200

CHAPTER 7

The SOV mystery and language evolution	201
7.1 Introduction	201
7.2 The neo-recapitulationist perspective	204
7.3 The SOV mystery	206
7.4 Extrapolation #1: Canine communication	207
7.4.1 Here and now, you and I, this and that visible	208
7.4.2 Socio-cultural context: The Society of Intimates	209
7.4.3 Information	211
7.4.4 A note on primate communication	211
7.5 Extrapolation #2: Early child language	212
7.5.1 Communicative mode	212
7.5.2 Socio-cultural context	215
7.6 Pre-grammatical pidgin as an evolutionary stage	216
7.7 The evolution of grammar: A hypothesis	218
7.7.1 Ground-zero: Shift of the communicative context	218
7.7.2 Changes in the communication system	219
7.7.2.1 Noun coding: From deixis to well-coded nouns	219
7.7.2.2 Verb coding: From one-word to two-word clauses	220
7.7.2.3 From mono-propositional to multi-propositional discourse	220

7.7.2.4	Grammaticalization as an evolutionary process	221
7.7.2.5	The drift away from SOV	222
7.8	Discussion	222
	Abbreviation of grammatical terms	224
CHAPTER 8
	Language and ontology	225
8.1	Introduction: How real is reality?	225
8.2	Intermezzo I: Nature vs. artifice	230
8.3	On construing a universe: Space, time and being	235
8.4	Tao and the pre-construed universe	238
8.5	Intermezzo II: Sense, reference and ‘The World’	241
8.6	The lexicalization of mundane experience	246
8.6.1	Preamble	246
8.6.2	Nouns	249
8.6.3	Verbs	250
8.6.4	Adjectives	251
8.7	Some evolutionary correlates of spatio-temporal experience	253
8.7.1	Preliminaries	253
8.7.2	Experience in a one-dimensional universe of linear time	253
8.7.3	Experience in a universe of time plus one spatial dimension: Early stationary organisms	255
8.7.4	Motion and the advent of a three-dimensional universe	256
8.7.5	Purposive motion and the advent of agency	257
8.7.6	From purposive motion to causation and agency	258
8.7.7	The ontology of causation	260
8.8	The ontological unity of experience, action and interpersonal behavior	261
8.8.1	Preamble	261
8.8.2	Causality, agency and information: Norms vs. counter-norms	262
8.8.3	Context, behavior and communication	265
8.8.4	The outer bounds of information	266
8.9	Closure	267
	Abbreviations of grammatical terms	268
	Bibliography	269
	General index	291
	Languages index	299
