

CONTENTS

|                                                 |     |
|-------------------------------------------------|-----|
| Preface to the Second Edition                   | v   |
| Preface to the First Edition                    | vii |
| I. THE TWO MORALITIES                           | 3   |
| The Moralities of Duty and of Aspiration        | 5   |
| The Moral Scale                                 | 9   |
| The Vocabulary of Morals and the Two Moralities | 13  |
| Marginal Utility and the Morality of Aspiration | 15  |
| Reciprocity and the Morality of Duty            | 19  |
| Locating the Pointer on the Moral Scale         | 27  |
| Rewards and Penalties                           | 30  |
| II. THE MORALITY THAT MAKES LAW POSSIBLE        | 33  |
| Eight Ways to Fail to Make Law                  | 33  |
| The Consequences of Failure                     | 38  |
| The Aspiration toward Perfection in Legality    | 41  |
| Legality and Economic Calculation               | 44  |
| The Generality of Law                           | 46  |
| Promulgation                                    | 49  |
| Retroactive Laws                                | 51  |
| The Clarity of Laws                             | 63  |
| Contradictions in the Laws                      | 65  |
| Laws Requiring the Impossible                   | 70  |
|                                                 | ix  |

CONTENTS

|                                                                                                         |     |
|---------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------|-----|
| Constancy of the Law through Time                                                                       | 79  |
| Congruence between Official Action and Declared Rule                                                    | 81  |
| Legality as a Practical Art                                                                             | 91  |
| III. THE CONCEPT OF LAW                                                                                 | 95  |
| Legal Morality and Natural Law                                                                          | 96  |
| Legal Morality and the Concept of Positive Law                                                          | 106 |
| The Concept of Science                                                                                  | 118 |
| Objections to the View of Law Taken Here                                                                | 122 |
| Hart's The Concept of Law                                                                        | 133 |
| Law as a Purposeful Enterprise and Law as aManifested Fact of Social Power                          | 145 |
| IV. THE SUBSTANTIVE AIMS OF LAW                                                                         | 152 |
| The Neutrality of the Law's Internal Moralitytoward Substantive Aims                                | 153 |
| Legality as a Condition of Efficacy                                                                     | 155 |
| Legality and Justice                                                                                    | 157 |
| Legal Morality and Laws Aiming at Alleged EvilsThat Cannot Be Defined                               | 159 |
| The View of Man Implicit in Legal Morality                                                              | 162 |
| The Problem of the Limits of Effective Legal Action                                                     | 168 |
| Legal Morality and the Allocation of EconomicResources                                              | 170 |
| Legal Morality and the Problem of Institutional Design                                                  | 177 |
| Institutional Design as a Problem of Economizing                                                        | 178 |
| The Problem of Defining the Moral Community                                                             | 181 |
| The Minimum Content of a Substantive Natural Law                                                        | 184 |
| V. A REPLY TO CRITICS                                                                                   | 187 |
| The Structure of Analytical Legal Positivism                                                            | 191 |
| Is Some Minimum Respect for the Principles ofLegality Essential to the Existence of a Legal System? | 197 |

|                                                                                    |                |
|------------------------------------------------------------------------------------|----------------|
| Do the Principles of Legality Constitute an “InternalMorality of Law”? | 200     |
| Some Implications of the Debate                                             | 224     |
| APPENDIX: THE PROBLEM OF THEGRUDGE INFORMER                        | 245 |
| Index                                                                       | 255     |

THE MORALITY OF LAW