

Acknowledgments

This book would not have been possible without the generous assistance of the Arts and Humanities Research Council of the United Kingdom, as well as grants from the Foundation for Canadian Studies in the United Kingdom and the Eighteenth-Century Scottish Studies Society. I have also benefited greatly from research fellowships at the John W. Kluge Center at the Library of Congress, the Robert H. Smith Center for International Jefferson Studies at Monticello, St. Andrew's Presbyterian College at Laurinburg, the United States Military Academy at West Point, the David Library of the American Revolution at Washington Crossing, the Colonial Williamsburg Foundation at Williamsburg, the William L. Clements Library at the University of Michigan, and from the International Seminar on the History of the Atlantic World at Harvard University. The support of all of these institutions allowed me to conduct the research essential to what is contained in this book.

This book would also have not been possible without the incredible staff at archives across the Atlantic region. All of the staff at the National Records of Scotland, the National Library of Scotland, and the National Archives at Kew, where much of this research was undertaken, deserve mention. Equally, I would like to thank Alex Du Toit, Highland Council Archives; Richard Cullen, Dundee City Council Archives; Deirdre Sweeny, Local History Library in Dundee; and Tessa Spencer, National Register of Archives Scotland. Permission is granted to quote from the Blair Castle Archives, courtesy of Jane Anderson, from the collection at Blair Castle, Perthshire. To quote from the Bagshawe Muniments (BAG 5/1), permission is kindly granted courtesy of The University of Manchester. Across the Atlantic, my thanks go to Jill MacMicken Wilson and John Boylan, Public Archives and Record Office on Prince Edward Island; Leo Cheverie of the University of Prince Edward Island; Virginia Clark, Nova Scotia Archives and Records Management;

Elizabeth Smith, Crown Lands Information Management Centre in Halifax; Denis Giguère, Mathieu Belanger, and Annie Leclerc, Bibliothèque et Archives nationales du Québec; Inge Flester, Colonial Williamsburg; Brian Dunnigan, Clayton “Gretzky” Lewis, Barbara DeWolfe, Cheney Schopieray, Terese Austin, Diana Sykes, Valerie Proehl, and Shneen Coldiron at the Clements Library. Permission to publish Clements Library material is granted by the director. Quotes from the Loudoun Papers, Abercromby Papers, Pocock Papers, and Orderly Books are reproduced by permission of the Huntington Library, San Marino, California. My thanks are also due to Carolyn Brown and Mary Lou Reker at the Kluge Center at the Library of Congress.

I owe a particularly special mention to the people who permitted me access to their own private collections. I was graciously permitted access to the manuscripts held by Simon Blackett at Invercauld Estate and by Mrs. Troughton of Ardchattan Priory, Argyll. I was also extremely grateful to have been permitted to discuss the private collections of Kerry DeLorey of New Brunswick, and Genevieve Macdonald and Mary Galland of Prince Edward Island related to the 84th Regiment of Foot. I am very thankful to Lorna MacLaine of Lochbuie for her kind words about my work and her permission to quote several letters from the MacLaine of Lochbuie Papers held at the National Records of Scotland. I was also humbled by the kindness and hospitality of Malcolm Bell Macdonald of Rammerscales Estate, who allowed me to reproduce his ancestor’s platoon banner, and Malcolm and Kathy Fraser of Reelig, who kept me better victualled than their own ancestor would have been while serving in North America.

I must also thank many people who have been involved in the publication of my previous work and to whom I offer my thanks for their permission to reproduce some of that work here. I wish to thank Julie Spraggon at Historical Research for permission to reprint from volume 85 (2012) a revised version of my article “Hierarchy, Authority, and Jurisdiction in the Mid-Eighteenth-Century Recruitment of the Highland Regiments,” which appears here in Chapter 1. I also wish to thank Vicki Lee and Clare Mence at Palgrave Macmillan, and Len Husband and Lisa Jemison from the University of Toronto Press for their permission to reprint (in Chapters 2 and 4) research from “‘The Greatest Number Walked Out’: Imperial Conflict and the Contractual Basis of Military Society in the Highland Regiments” in Soldiering in Britain and Ireland, 1750–1850: Men at Arms, edited by Catriona Kennedy and Matthew McCormack (London: Palgrave Macmillan, 2012), and “Cutting Heads from Shoulders: The Conquest of Canada in Gaelic Thought, 1759–1791” in Revisiting 1759: The Conquest of Canada in Historical Perspective, ed. Phillip K. Buckner and John Reid (Toronto: University of Toronto Press, 2012). To the editors of these volumes, I also extend my heartfelt gratitude for their generosity and support. In acquiring the permissions for this book, I was also privileged to be able to interact with Emma Halford-Forbes, Black Watch Castle and Museum; Philip Hunt, National Galleries of Scotland; Jerry Bloomer, R. W. Norton Art Gallery; Stefanie Metze and Alison Rosie, National Records of Scotland; Leslie Tobias-Olsen, John Carter Brown Library; Johannes Plambeck, Cornell University; Helen Osmani, National Museums of Scotland; David Houldsworth, Brodies Solicitors; Louise Girard, Stewart Museum; and Nikita Hooper, National Trust. To you all, thank you.

I am equally indebted to the many people who offered their assistance and advice during the course of this research and who gave up their own personal time to fill in the rather considerable gaps in my knowledge. Ed Macdonald, Donald Parker, Grant Grams, John Reid, Terry Deveau, Nick Aitken, and Jeff Turner made my research trip to Canada a hugely enjoyable experience. Various research trips and conferences over the last six years have also allowed me to discuss the eighteenth century with Bernard Bailyn, Fred Anderson, Virginia DeJohn Anderson, C. Thomas Long, Scott Hendrix, Christine Johnson, Justin Liles, Alejandro Rabinovich, Gabriel DiMeglio, Christian Crouch, and all the other members of the Atlantic History Seminar. At West Point, my thanks go to Major Joshua Bradley, Major Jason Warren, Jean-Francois Lozier, Robert Clemm, and everybody who attended the Summer Seminar. I would also like to mention Bill Caudill, to whom I owe special thanks for inviting me to Laurinburg for the Charles Bascombe Shaw Memorial Scottish Heritage Symposium in North Carolina in early 2010. My research fellowship at the Clements Library in late 2012 was a particular delight, and I would like to extend my thanks not only to those previously mentioned but also to John and Arlene Shy, who did so much to make me feel at home in Ann Arbor, and Crisca Bierwert, who was willing to rent a room to an itinerant Scotsman.

I have benefited immensely from a network of scholars at the University of Edinburgh, the New School University, and elsewhere, whose knowledge and support color every page of this book. I owe a special thanks to Andrew Mackillop, Andrew O’Shaughnessy, Stephen Brumwell, Linda Colley, Julian Hoppit, Simon Newman, Philip Morgan, Greg Dowd, Owen Dudley-Edwards, Stana Nenadic, Ewen Cameron, Gordon Pentland, Pertti Ahonen, Niall Whelehan, Enda Delaney, and Crispin Bates, whose knowledge and friendship were so important to this research. My thanks also go to Wayne Lee, Steve Pincus, Steven Wilkinson, Earl John Chapman, Andrew Wells, Jeffrey Wert, David Dobson, Stuart Allan, Felicity Donohue, David Brown, Allan Kennedy, Geoffrey Plank, Richard Sher, Patrick Griffin, Peter Onuf, Whitney Martinko, Lawrence Hatter, Martin Öhman, Gaye Wilson, Oz Frankel, Jeremy Varon, Elaine Abelson, Juliet Shields, Hannah Weiss Muller, and James Amemasor. The advice and support of all of these people was fundamental to bringing this project to fruition. I must also thank the network of support that has enabled me to sustain the efforts necessary to continue to research and travel. I owe some of my biggest thanks to Vidhya Swaminathan (who put up with me for a year in New York), Nina Nazionale, Ted O'Reilly (who insists on supporting the wrong side of Glasgow), Cyp Stephenson, Josslyn Steiner, Keir Strickland, Matt Adams, Emma Brodie, Teresa Sherratt, Nina Menezes, Mathew West (fellow Springsteen aficionado), David Lewis, Chris Minty, Aaron Graham, David Huyssen, Sally Tuckett, David Ritchie, Jane Ridder-Patrick, William Tatum III (whose encyclopedic knowledge of the British army I relied upon to a great extent), Hisashi and Suzee Kuboyama, Keisuke Masaki, Daniel Clinkman, and David Taylor (who began teaching me history in high school many years ago and continues to do so today). To all of these people, I owe a huge debt of gratitude.

Foremost, however, among all the many people who have contributed to this book are Frank Cogliano, Alex Murdoch, Harry Dickinson, Tom Devine, and Stephen Conway. Without the help and encouragement of this unrivaled group of scholars, I would not have been able to deal with the complexities of the issues raised in this text. They read and commented on every page of this manuscript at various stages, and it is to their credit that this book is being published. I pray that the manuscript justifies their faith and their efforts. I would also like to thank everyone involved in this project at Yale University Press. Christopher Rogers, Laura Davulis, Ash Lago, Kate Davis, Eva Skewes, and Phillip King, you have my unending gratitude. Of course, for all this assistance, any errors contained in this book are mine and mine alone.

Thoiream taing riutha sin 'nan cànan fhèin a chuidich leis a' chànan a' Ghàidhealtachd. Tha mo Gàidhlig às aonais, ach e a' fàs nas fheàrr. Mu dhèidhinn a' Ghàidhlig ceart, tha a h-uile creideas aig na daoine seo: aig Oilthigh Dhùn Èideann, chiad Dòmhnall Meek agus Wilson McLeod airson luathsachadh dhomh a' eisgeach Gàidhlig nuair 's e lar-cheumnach a bh' an-nam. Cuideachd Anja Gunderloch, Joan Macdonald, Ann Paterson, Chrisma Bould, Erin Hill, Rona Wilkie, Ailean Turner, Michael Newton, Vincent Morely, William Gillies, Peter Mackay, Rob Dunbar, Andy Macdonald, agus Stu(th) mhòr—Stiubhart Moireasdan Stone!

Finally, I want to thank the people who have been closest to me throughout this work. Lt. Col. (Ret.) R. B. Anderson showed me more of what it means to be a soldier and a historian, in one morning at Yorktown, than have all the scholarly works I have read during this research. His family—Debi, Dane, Mandy, Rath, Michelle, Virginia, and Aeyrie Gray—I count as my second family. To Sarah, thank you with all my heart; you are the reason I was able to do this. Thank you to all the McCaslins—Mary, Rod, Rob, Kerry, Andrew, and James. Michael, I may not be able to write you a prescription, but I'm still a doctor. This book is dedicated to my mother and father, who gave me everything. Is lag gualainn gun bhràthair.

This page intentionally left blank