Acknowledgments

It is a pleasure to thank the many friends and colleagues who gave their time and energy over the years as I worked on this book.

I owe an enormous debt of gratitude to Mark Peterson and James Turner. Both read and made extensive comments on each chapter as I finished it. Their suggestions have improved the book immeasurably. Thanks to Jennifer Ratner-Rosenhagen, Daniel Rodgers, Mark Peterson, and Jonathan Gienapp for reading the whole manuscript and then participating in a three-hour seminar at Stanford University in September 2015 dedicated to analyzing the book's central claims and improving the argument. All entered cheerfully into the spirit of what I was trying to do and gave me many superb suggestions for revision.

A number of other colleagues commented on individual chapters or in some way entered substantively into the conceptual architecture of the book. Many thanks to Keith Baker, Mary Elizabeth Berry, Jennifer Burns, Leslie Butler, Giovanna Ceserani, Francis Cogliano, John Dixon, Dan Edelstein, Paula Findlen, Estelle Freedman, Nils Gilman, David Hollinger, Sarah Igo, Joel Isaac, James Kloppenberg, Christopher Krebs, Emily Levine, Suzanne Marchand, Carol McKibben, the late Michael O'Brien, Jessica Riskin, Daniel Rosenberg, Dorothy Ross, James Sheehan, David Grant Smith, Amy Dru Stanley, Richard White, and Kären Wigen. Two of the anonymous readers for Yale University Press provided extremely helpful suggestions for revision. I thank my editor at Yale,

Steve Wasserman, for ably shepherding the manuscript through its final stages. Susan Laity of Yale copyedited the manuscript with magnificent skill and sound judgment.

Over the years I have presented aspects of this book in various settings, and I thank the many participants who improved the manuscript with their ideas and suggestions: the Department of History at the University of California, Berkeley; the Representing Time workshop at the Stanford Humanities Center; the Futures of Atlantic Intellectual History conference at Harvard University; the Republic of Letters in North America conference at the Huntington Library; the Let There Be Enlightenment conference at Stanford University; the Department of History at Stanford; the Bay Area Seminar in Early American History and Culture; and the Humanities Center at the University of Rochester.

Colleagues at the Stanford University Library are a constant source of help on research matters large and small. I am especially grateful to Becky Fischbach, John Mustain, and Benjamin Stone for their expertise and kindness over the years. Scott Spillman, who is completing his dissertation in the Department of History at Stanford, secured the illustrations and permissions; I thank him for going about these tasks with his usual superhuman efficiency and competence. My wonderful colleagues at the Stanford Humanities Center make coming to work each day a pleasure. Special thanks to Susan Sebbard for daily doses of good cheer.

Barrett Moore and Sherril Green listened to my various ideas on long hikes among the redwoods and banana slugs of the Santa Cruz mountains; they are partially responsible for maintaining my optimism and sanity as I directed a large research institute and wrote a book. My family is an endless source of encouragement. I especially thank my parents, Jacqueline Mammerickx Winterer and Edward L. Winterer; my sister, Juliette Winterer; and my nieces, Amelia and Linnea Wright. My love for the three delightful people who lived with this book and its author every day is reflected on the dedication page.
