

Acknowledgments

We do not remember ever writing anything that made us conscious of the limitations of our own perspective to the degree that this book did. That being the case, we feel more indebted than ever to the friends and colleagues who generously read the book in draft form, offered comments, and in many cases continued to engage us in dialogue about it. These included Kutter Callaway, Cathy Eskew, Tommy Givens, Michael Gorman, Jesse Huddleston, Jeremy Hutton, Robert Johnston, Karen Keen, Monica Miller, and Barry Seltser. In some cases the engagement took the form of disagreement—we are responsible for the book that has emerged—but it is certainly the product of collegial energy that inspired us and challenged us to think more deeply and argue more clearly.

We are grateful to Jennifer Banks at Yale University Press, who immediately saw the book's potential, but also brought an editorial perspective that helped to shape its form. We also thank Margaret Otzel and Jessie Dolch for their kind editorial work; Enid Zafran for compiling the indices; Brenda King, Amanda Cordero, and Stephen Cebik for ensuring the book found its readers; and Kristy Leonard and Eva Skewes for their attention to many details along the way.

As we note in the Introduction, this book began from conversations within the family, and we are grateful to have, within that nucleus, formidable minds, voracious readers, and gracious interlocutors such as Judy, Carly, Maddie, and Sandy, who think for themselves and possess strong moral visions that enrich our own.

The Widening of God's Mercy

This page intentionally left blank