

ACKNOWLEDGMENTS

It is a daunting task to thank everyone responsible for this book. There are just so many. As a young scholar, I have been exceptionally fortunate in being surrounded by warm and brilliant people who made this project so much better than it would have otherwise been.

This book began at Yale University. While there, I received generous research funding from the Beinecke Rare Book and Manuscript Library, the MacMillan Center, International Security Studies, and the Smith Richardson Foundation. I benefited greatly from the teaching and support of Alejandra Dubcovsky, Joanne Freeman, Jay Gitlin, Bruce Gordon, Ed Rugemer, and Stuart Schwartz. Keith Wrightson deserves a special mention for always reminding me that history must be grounded in ordinary human lives. Daniel Hulsebosch and Allan Macinnes provided immense help from afar as members of my committee. I must also thank the late and great John Merriman, who approached history with the same joie de vivre with which he treated French wines and Michigan football. I miss him every day. Finally, I cannot possibly say enough to thank Steve Pincus. I first met Steve when I was a terrified twenty-year-old on a summer-abroad program in London, and he more than anyone has taught me what it means to be a historian. He has pushed me to ask big questions and has convinced me that I could answer them. He taught me that history is a vital and living discipline with relevance to the here and now. Most important, he has always, always believed in my promise as a scholar.

ACKNOWLEDGMENTS

My fellow students were the best part of my Yale education. Many of the book's ideas were conceived over cappuccinos in the British Library Café or pints at Gryphon's Pub (and maybe even a rum cocktail or two at Trailer Happiness). Many thanks go to Catherine Arnold, Tiraana Bains, Justin Brooks, Mara Caden, Sarah Ifft Decker, Michael Hattem, Elle Nye, Justin Randolph, Alec Zuercher Reichardt, Miranda Sachs, Eric Smith, Hillary Taylor, and Evan Wilson. Christian Burset deserves special mention for his penetrating questions, boundless knowledge, and putting up with me as a flatmate for a year in London. Finally, never-ending thanks are due to my academic twin, Amy Dunagin, for being my best sounding board when my ideas have gotten tangled, for being patient with my interminable questions, and for teaching me to love London again after I had become jaded with long days in the archives. You will always be the Amy One to my Amy Two.

It was an enormous stroke of good fortune to receive a postdoctoral fellowship from the University of Southern California and the Huntington Library's Early Modern Studies Institute (EMSI). My two years in Los Angeles were some of the best of my life, and I credit leisurely lunches at the 1919 Cafe for transforming me from a student to a scholar. Many thanks to Karin Amundsen, Alice Baumgartner, Kristen Block, Amy Braden, William Deverell, Karen Halttunen, Julia Lewandoski, Tawny Paul, Roy Ritchie, Carole Shammas, Asheesh Kapur Siddique, Alexander Statman, and Vanessa Wilkie. Special thanks are due to Mark Hanna and Dana Velasco Murillo, who, over the course of long walks around the gardens (not to mention London and Canterbury, England), became both generous mentors and good friends. Boundless thanks to Lindsay O'Neill, the heart of the Huntington and the USC History Department, for guiding me through teaching crises and the job market, and even helping me arrange the move-out from my apartment in the middle of a global pandemic. Finally, my sincere thanks to Peter Mancall, who is a superb scholar, an exceptional mentor, and an overall lovely human being. The EMSI will always be my scholarly home away from home, and Peter makes it the very special place that it is.

ACKNOWLEDGMENTS

My good fortune has only continued at the University of Alabama at Birmingham (UAB), in what has been both a figurative and literal homecoming. Great thanks to my wonderful colleagues Andy Baer, Michele Forman, Devon Golaszewski, Andrew Keitt, George Liber, Aiqi Liu, Stephen Miller, Britney Murphy, Pam Murray, Tola Rodrick, Brian Steele, John Van Sant, Walter Ward, and Natasha Zaretsky. Special thanks are due to our fearless leader, Jonathan Wiesen, who has been the best chair a junior scholar could ever ask for. Thanks too to Melanie Daily, Jerrie McCurry, and Robin Albarano for keeping the department ticking and for their consistent cheer. UAB College of Arts and Sciences has also provided helpful support for this book through a Dean's Humanities Grant.

I have received generous financial support from the Program in Early American Economy and Society at the Library Company of Philadelphia, the Huntington Library, the Massachusetts Historical Society, and the National Endowment for the Humanities. Archivists and librarians at all these institutions have lent invaluable aid. Special thanks go to Kanisorn Wongsrichanalai for his help as I navigated research at the MHS while most of the world was shut down in 2020.

I had the opportunity to present research from this project in many forums, including the Early Modern Empires Colloquium at Yale, the Center for Historical Enquiry and the Social Sciences at Yale, the Empires and Atlantics Forum at the University of Chicago, the Early American Republic Seminar at the City University of New York, the American Origins and British History seminars at the Early Modern Studies Institute, the Institute of Thomas Paine Studies at Iona University, the twentieth anniversary conference for the Early Modern Studies Institute, the American Society for Eighteenth-Century Studies, the Consortium on the Revolutionary Era, the North American Conference on British Studies, and the American Historical Association. Steve Pincus also ran an online weekly zoom forum I affectionately call the Covid seminar that was a lifeline in the summer of 2020. I give sincere thanks to the participants of these conferences and seminars for their feedback on my works-in-progress, as well as to the organizers for their often thankless work. In particular, thanks are due to Bill Bulman, the late Trevor Burnard, Megan Cherry, Mary Draper, Justin du Rivage, Jessica Choppin Roney, Abigail Swingen, and James Vaughn.

Much of chapter 2 was originally printed as “Patriotism and Partisanship in Post-Union Scotland, 1724–1737,” Scottish Historical Review 97, no. 1 (April 2018): 57–84. The majority of chapter 3 was first published as “The New York Patriot Movement: Partisanship, the Free Press, and Britain’s Imperial Constitution, 1731–1739,” William and Mary Quarterly 77, no. 1 (January 2020): 33–64, and a small portion of chapter 1 was published as “Patriotism after the Hanoverian Succession,” in The Hanoverian Succession in Great Britain and Its Empire, edited by Brent Sirota and Allan I. Macinnes (Woodbridge, U.K.: Boydell, 2019), 155–174. I thank the Scottish Historical Review, William and Mary Quarterly, and Boydell Press for their permission to reprint. Many thanks too to the editors and readers for their useful feedback on these earlier publications, including Wayne Bodle, Simon Middleton, Graeme Morton, William Offutt, Joshua Piker, Nicholas Popper, and anonymous readers. I am also grateful to Sir Robert Clerk of Penicuik for his permission to cite the Clerk of Penicuik Papers deposited at the National Records of Scotland. Finally, I want to thank Yale University Press and especially Phillip King, Adina Popescu, Eva Skewes, and Ann Twombly. Many thanks to the anonymous readers of both the proposal and the manuscript, who undoubtedly made this into a stronger and more streamlined book.

I have the best family in the world, and I am extremely grateful to the job market fates for allowing me to return to Birmingham, where so many of them live. Special thanks to Kathy MacDonald and Peter Lukasiwicz for welcoming me into their family and turning me into an honorary Canadian. Thanks to my amazing grandparents, Mimi and Granddad, for always being my biggest fans and for showing me through their example how to live a life filled with travel and family. To Jay, thanks for being the little brother I could always look up to. Thanks to my cat, Sir Robert Walpole (Wally), for keeping me company as I wrote this book and for being slightly more agreeable than his namesake. To my daughter, Caroline, I hope you don’t mind bedtime stories that heavily feature grumbling parliamentarians, revolutionary mobs, and sea captains who lose their ears. And then there is Adam, my partner in all things for the past seventeen years. Mere thanks seem terribly insufficient. He has encouraged me to gallivant back and forth across the country and the Atlantic; he has listened to me discuss every thorny historical problem, to the point that he could give a lecture on Namierite historiography; he has followed me to Alabama and learned to talk to his patients with a slightly Canadian-sounding southern drawl. Adam, I love you, and I am so excited for our next big adventure in parenthood.

ACKNOWLEDGMENTS

Last but never least, thanks to my parents, Ann and John Watson. They were my first teachers, patiently marking up my English essays and teaching me about paragraph transitions. They filled me up with stories of proud female leaders like Eleanor of Aquitaine and Boudica. They took me on my first trip to Britain, and, clearly, I have never looked back. They have loved me fiercely. This book is dedicated to them.

This page intentionally left blank