KRISTA CAMENZIND received her Ph.D. from the University of California, San Diego, in 2002. Her dissertation is entitled "From the Holy Experiment to the Paxton Boys: Violence, Manhood, and Race in Pennsylvania During the Seven Years' War." She thanks Catherine Forslund, René Hayden, Michael Meranze, and Sarah Schrank for their helpful comments. Her chapter is recipient of third prize in the 2003 Colonial Essay competition, sponsored by the Colonial Society of Pennsylvania, in cooperation with the McNeil Center for Early American Studies.

CARLA GERONA teaches at the University of Texas at Dallas and is completing a book titled Night Journeys: The Power of Dreams in Transatlantic Quaker Culture. Versions of her chapter were presented at the Newberry Library in 2001 and the Organization of American Historians annual meeting in 1998. For their comments, she thanks the participants in those sessions as well as Matthew Dennis, Toby Ditz, Gregory Dowd, Jerry Frost, Jack Greene, Christopher Grasso, Frederick Hoxie, Carol Karlsen, James Merrell, Carla Pestana, and Mechal Sobel. She especially acknowledges Alden Vaughan, who inspired her to become an early Americanist while she was an undergraduate at Columbia University.

STEVEN C. HARPER teaches Church history and doctrine at Brigham Young University and is a volume editor of the Joseph Smith Papers. He completed his Ph.D. at Lehigh University, where he was Lawrence Henry Gipson Dissertation Fellow in 2000. He thanks Jean R. Soderlund for her substantial shaping of his chapter.

ALISON DUNCAN HIRSCH (Ph.D., Columbia University, 1991) is the editor of the forthcoming Early American Indian Documents: Treaties and Laws, vol. 3: Pennsylvania Treaties, 1756–1776, and author of several articles on early American women's history. She has taught history, American studies, and women's studies for twenty years, most recently at Susquehanna University.

GREGORY T. KNOUFF completed his Ph.D. in early American history at Rutgers University in 1996. He is a member of the history department at Keene State College and the author of The Soldiers' Revolution: Pennsylva- nians in Arms and the Forging of Early American Identity (Penn State University Press, 2004).

MICHAEL DEAN MACKINTOSH is a Ph.D. candidate in history at Temple University and has been a Friends of the MCEAS fellow at the McNeil Center for Early American Studies. His chapter is recipient of second prize in the 2003 Colonial Essay competition, sponsored by the Colonial Society of Pennsylvania, in cooperation with the McNeil Center.

JAMES H. MERRELL is the Lucy Maynard Salmon Professor of History at Vassar College. His works include The Indians' New World: Catawbas and Their Neighbors from European Contact Through the Era of Removal, and Into the American Woods: Negotiators on the Pennsylvania Frontier.

PAUL MOYER is a member of the history department at the State University of New York College at Brockport. He received his doctorate from the College of William and Mary and has previously taught at William and Mary and the University of Central Arkansas. He is completing a book on frontier settlement and agrarian unrest in revolutionary-era northeastern Pennsylvania.

WILLIAM A. PENCAK, professor of history at Penn State University, was the founding editor of Explorations in Early American Culture (now Early American Studies) and was the editor of Pennsylvania History from 1994 to 2002. His coedited volumes include Beyond Philadelphia: The American Revolution in the Pennsylvania Hinterland; Making and Remaking Pennsylvania's Civil War; Riot and Revelry in Early America; and Pennsylvania: A History of the Commonwealth, all published by Penn State University Press. He is writing a book on the Jewish communities of early America.

DAVID L. PRESTON teaches early American history and American Indian history at the Citadel. He completed his graduate studies at the College of William and Mary and is at work on a book tentatively titled "The Texture of Contact: European and Indian Settler Communities on the Iroquoian Borderlands, 1720–1780." He thanks James Axtell, Mike McGiffert, Bob Gross, Paul Moyer, James Spady, and the attendees of a colloquium of the Omohundro Institute of Early American History and Culture in March 2001 for their comments on his chapter.

DANIEL K. RICHTER is the Richard S. Dunn Director of the McNeil Center for Early American Studies and professor of history at the University of Pennsylvania. He is author of Facing East from Indian Country: A Native History of Early America (2001), and The Ordeal of the Longhouse: The Peoples of the Iroquois League in the Era of European Colonization (1992). With James H. Merrell, he is coeditor of Beyond the Covenant Chain: The Iroquois and Their Neighbors in Indian North America, 1600–1800, recently published in paperback by Penn State University Press.

AMY C. SCHUTT is a postdoctoral researcher with the McNeil Center for Early American Studies and the National Park Service. She gratefully acknowledges support from a Spencer Foundation Small Research Grant and from a Garrison Fellowship/Major Grant from Colgate University, which enabled her to complete the research for her chapter. She expresses her thanks to Vernon Nelson of the Moravian Archives, Bethlehem, for his assistance.

JOHN SMOLENSKI is a member of the history department at the University of California, Davis. He was educated at Yale University and the University of Pennsylvania, where he received his Ph.D. in 2001. His chapter is drawn from his current book project, entitled “Friends and Strangers: The Evolution of a Creole Civic Culture in Colonial Pennsylvania.” Earlier versions of his chapter were presented at the 1998 meeting of the Organization of American Historians and the 1999 Roundtable on Law and Semiotics. He thanks Matthew Dennis, Carol Karlsen, Michael Zuckerman, Kathleen Brown, Alan Taylor, Stephanie Dyer, and Ken Miller for their comments, suggestions, and assistance.

JAMES O’NEIL SPADY is a Ph.D. candidate in American studies at the College of William and Mary, where he is writing a dissertation on colonialism and the cultural politics of education in Georgia and South Carolina from 1700 to the 1820s. He acknowledges the contributions of friends and mentors to early drafts of his chapter, beginning with his master’s thesis committee: James Axtell, Robert A. Gross, and Michael McGiffert. He also thanks Sharon Block, Wendy Gonaver, Grey Gundaker, Leisa Meyer, Richard Price, and David Preston for their criticism and encouragement.

WILLIAM A. STARNA is professor of anthropology emeritus at the State University of New York, Oneonta, and lives in Bremen, Germany. He has published widely on the Iroquoian and Algonquian Indian populations of the eastern United States and Canada, in addition to contemporary state-federal-Indian relations. He is grateful for the prodding of Elisabeth Tooker and the late Francis Jennings in the development of his essay, and thanks Corinna Dally-Starna and Martha D. Shattuck for their comments on early drafts. Portions of his chapter appear in William A. Starna and George R. Hamell, "History and the Burden of Proof: The Case of Iroquois Influence on the U.S. Constitution," New York History 77 (1996): 427–52, and are reprinted here with permission.

LOUIS M. WADDELL received his Ph.D. from the University of North Carolina in 1971 and has been an associate historian on the staff of the Pennsylvania Historical and Museum Commission since 1973. He was the last editor of The Papers of Henry Bouquet and is employed in the Core Services Section of the State Archives in Harrisburg.
