

ACKNOWLEDGMENTS

In its earliest stages, when my research was still focused on civil society, I was gently pushed to think outside the box by other scholars at a Social Science Research Council meeting in Cairo in March 1997. Since then, I have benefitted immensely from extended conversations with Haldun Güllalp, Augustus Richard Norton, and Ayşe Önal. They and a number of other colleagues have offered insightful and unsparingly honest critiques of earlier versions of this work, some generously reading through multiple drafts. In particular, I would like to thank Thomas Barfield, Benjamin Campbell, Dale Eickelman, Akile Gürsoy, Reşat Kasaba, Nancy Lindisfarne, Gwenn Okruhlik, Kevin Reinhart, and Ariel Salzmänn. The ideas contained herein, however, remain fully my responsibility. Stephen Kimmel and Belkis Kümbetoğlu generously introduced me to their wide circles of acquaintances. Thanks are due as well to Kathy Kwasnica and Janet O'Neil at Boston University's Department of Anthropology and Güliden Güneri at the American Research Institute in Turkey for their assistance and unfailing good cheer, to Armağan Güneri for her excellent transcription work, Aslı Baykal for keeping me up to date, and Yasmine Ziesler for keeping me organized. Finally, I am deeply grateful to Michael Freeman, who commented on endless drafts and whose patience and encouragement sustained my momentum and enthusiasm throughout the writing of this book.
