

ACKNOWLEDGMENTS

We want to thank the Andrew Young School of Policy Studies at Georgia State University for funding our visiting scholar proposal, which allowed for critical data collection and collaborative writing trips that would have been otherwise impossible. We are also grateful to colleagues at Georgia State, specifically Don Hunt and Shila Hawk, who assisted with data collection, coding, and library work; Lou Arcangeli, who assisted with interview recruitment and insightful feedback on the project's direction; and Richard Wright, who provided invaluable feedback on draft materials. At the University of Louisville, we are thankful for the excellent transcription work of Sandra Wade. We also appreciate the support and assistance that we received from the staff of the University of California Press, including Maura Roessner and Jack Young, who oversaw the editorial process; Chris Loomis, Dore Brown, and Jessica Ling, who oversaw various stages of the marketing and production process; and Genevieve Thurston, who copyedited the manuscript. Finally, this project would not have been possible were it not for the officers of the two unnamed metropolitan police departments that boldly opened their doors to our wide-ranging ethnographic work and the many law enforcement officers from the more than a dozen local, state, and federal agencies who took time out of their busy lives to participate in our lengthy interviews.
