

ACKNOWLEDGMENTS

In writing this book, I have incurred more debts than I can adequately acknowledge here: to tutors, friends, colleagues, supervisors, librarians, faculty administrators, examiners, editors, readers, and students. If I've been unable to find space for many of those wonderful people in what follows, I can only apologize and trust that they'll claim a beverage of their choice next time I see them.

I am grateful to the Arts and Humanities Research Council, the Faculty of Classics and Corpus Christi College, Cambridge, and the Erasmus Exchange Programme for the grants which allowed me to undertake my PhD research, and to the Hulme Fund, the John Fell Fund, Brasenose College, Oxford, and the Oxford Research Centre in the Humanities for the postdoctoral fellowship which gave me the time I needed to revise my dissertation. I put the finishing touches to this book in the gaps between tutorials on early medieval history with enthusiastic students at Balliol College and St Peter's College, Oxford.

My particular thanks go to those who undertook to read the whole thing (some, heroically, more than once). Above all, I thank my doctoral supervisor, Christopher Kelly, who remains both my strictest reader and my most loyal champion; I continually appreciate both his criticism and his friendship. My examiners, Rosamond McKitterick and Caroline Humfress, gave many insightful suggestions for ways I might develop the thesis into a book, and my postdoctoral mentor, Chris Wickham, helped me to see my revisions through. At University of California Press, Eric Schmidt and Peter Brown gave me the impetus to make important changes to the manuscript; my peer reviewers were both incredibly generous and usefully pointed in their feedback. On that note, I thank Eric Schmidt, Maev

Cornell-Taylor, and Cindy Fulton at the press and the copy editor Juliana Froggatt for their efficiency, their clarity, and their good-natured support throughout the publishing process.

Many others have provided crucial assistance of various sorts. Sam Cohen, Jonathan Conant, Richard Flower, Éric Fournier, Roland Steinacher, and Michael Williams sent me work in advance of publication. Pierre-Marie Hombert shared with me his edition of Vigilius's Dialogue ahead of publication, which helped me to sharpen my analysis and allowed me to cite his much superior text. Jonathan Conant, Rebecca Flemming, Éric Fournier, Erika Hermanowicz, Gerda Heydemann, Andy Merrills, and Michael Williams provided helpful comments on draft versions of various chapters. Andy also kindly supplied his map of Vandal Africa for my use, and Taher Ghalia provided the cover image. This book has also benefited from the many colleagues and friends with whom I've discussed all manner of things late ancient and early medieval—often taking time out of busy schedules to do so. I greatly appreciate their collective generosity.

Above all, though, I thank my family, whose love and fearsome support for my pursuit of an academic career never seem to diminish, no matter how obscure my work becomes. This book is for Ingrid, whose contribution I still cannot put into words.

Balliol College, Oxford
27 March 2017