INTRODUCTION	3
PART ONE: THE GUIDING THREAD
CHAPTER 1
Synthesis and Judgment	17
Representation and Object of Representation	18
The “Logical Use of the Understanding” and the Categories	26
Synthesis	30
Synthesis and Judgment: The Two Paths of the Transcendental Deduction of the Categories	33
CHAPTER 2
The “Threefold Synthesis” and the Mathematical Model	35
The “Synthesis of Apprehension in Intuition”	36
The “Synthesis of Reproduction in a Representation of Imagination”	38
The “Synthesis of Recognition in a Concept”	44
Concept and Object: The Concept as Rule	48
The Transcendental Unity of Self-Consciousness and the Categories	52
Objective Deduction and Subjective Deduction: Kant’s Rewriting of the Transcendental Deduction of the Categories	56
CHAPTER 3
The Transition to Judgment	59
Synthesis: A Function of the Understanding?	61
The Kantian “Cogito”	64
The “I think” and the Object: Logical Forms of Judgment and Transcendental Syntheses of Imagination	69
PART TWO: THE LOGICAL FORMS OF JUDGMENT AS FORMS OF REFLECTION
CHAPTER 4
Logical Definitions of Judgment	81
Judgment as “The Manner in Which Given Cognitions Are Brought to the Objective Unity of Apperception”	82

Judgment as “Representation of the Unity of the Consciousness of Various Representations,” or Concept Subordination	85
Judgment as a Rule, and the Different Types of Relation in Judgment	93
CHAPTER 5
How Discursive Understanding Comes to the Sensible Given:
Comparison of Representations and Judgment	107
Comparing	111
Concept Formation through “Comparison, Reflection, and Abstraction”	115
Comparison/Reflection/Abstraction and the Comparison of Concepts in Judgment	122
Some Difficulties with Kant’s List of Concepts of Comparison	128
CHAPTER 6
Concepts of Comparison, Forms of Judgment, Concept Formation	131
“Identity” and “Difference” of Representations, “Quantity” of Judgments	132
“Agreement” and “Conflict” of Concepts, “Quality” of Judgments	136
“Inner” and “Outer”, and “Relation” in Judgment	140
“Matter” and “Form”, and Modalities of Judgment	147
The Unity of the Critique of Pure Reason and the Critique of Judgment	163
CHAPTER 7
Judgments of Perception and Judgments of Experience	167
Judgments of Perception and Judgments of Experience in the Prolegomena: From the Mere “Logical Connection of Perceptions” to Subsumption under the Categories	170
Judgment in Section 19 of the Critique	180
Judgments of Perception and Judgments of Experience in the Logic: From Uncriticized Objectifications to their Corrections	188
Discursive Judgments and Sensible Syntheses: And the Third Critique, Again	195
PART THREE: SYNTHESIS INTELLECTUALIS, SYNTHESIS SPECIOSA: TRANSCENDENTAL IMAGINATION AND THE FOUNDATION OF THE SYSTEM OF PRINCIPLES
CHAPTER 8
Synthesis Speciosa and Forms of Sensibility	211
Synthesis Speciosa and Kant’s Completion of the Transcendental Deduction of the Categories	212
Synthesis Speciosa, Outer Sense, Inner Sense	228
CHAPTER 9
The Primacy of Quantitative Syntheses	243
Preliminary Remarks: Synthesis Speciosa and Schematism of the Pure Concepts of Understanding	243
Quantities of Judgment, Schemata, and Categories of Quantity	247
How Is Pure Mathematics Possible? Kant’s Principle of the Axioms of Intuition	274

CHAPTER 10
The Real as Appearance: Imagination and Sensation	292
Logical Forms and Categories of Quality	292
Reality, Negation, and Limitation in Appearance: Sensation and Imagination	298
“The Schema of Reality, as the Quantity of Something Insofar as It Fills Time” and the Principle of Intensive Magnitudes	310
CHAPTER 11
The Constitution of Experience	324
Subject and Predicate, Substance and Accident, Permanent and Transitory	325
Ground and Consequence, Cause and Effect, Anterior and Posterior	345
Logical Disjunction, Simultaneity, Community	375
CONCLUSION
The Capacity to Judge and “Ontology as Immanent Thinking”	394
BIBLIOGRAPHY	401
INDEX	409
INDEX OF CITATIONS OF KANT’S WORKS	415
