

Contents

|                       |    |
|-----------------------|----|
| List of Illustrations | ix |
| Preface               | xi |
| A Note to the Reader  | xv |

PART ONE: INTRODUCTION

|                                                                |    |
|----------------------------------------------------------------|----|
| 1. Theoretical Setting                                         | 3  |
| The Two Transitional Periods in Japanese History: A Sketch     | 12 |
| Limitations and Organization of the Book                       | 17 |
| 2. The Monkey as Metaphor for the Japanese                     | 20 |
| Why the Monkey?                                                | 20 |
| The Monkey as Metaphor for Humans                              | 22 |
| The Line between Humans and Monkeys                            | 32 |
| The Monkey as an Anomalous Symbol and the Hierarchy of Meaning | 34 |

PART TWO: MEANINGS THROUGH HISTORY

|                                                                              |    |
|------------------------------------------------------------------------------|----|
| 3. The Monkey in Japanese Culture: Historical Transformations of Its Meaning | 41 |
| The Monkey as Mediator in Early and Transitional Periods                     | 42 |
| Early and Transitional Periods: A Summary                                    | 55 |
| The Monkey as Scapegoat and Trickster in Later History                       | 59 |
| Contemporary Developments                                                    | 72 |

CONTENTS

|                                                                                                  |     |
|--------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------|-----|
| 4. The Special Status People in Japanese Society:Historical Transformations of Their Meaning | 75  |
| Ancient Period (300 B.C.–Twelfth Century)                                                        | 77  |
| Medieval Period (Twelfth–Sixteenth Centuries)                                                    | 81  |
| Early Modern Period (1603–1868)                                                                  | 93  |
| Modern Period (1868–Present)                                                                     | 97  |
| Summary and Interpretation                                                                       | 99  |
| 5. The Monkey Performance: HistoricalTransformations of Its Meaning                          | 101 |
| Ancient and Medieval Periods (300 B.C.–Sixteenth Century)                                        | 103 |
| Early Modern Period (1603–1868)                                                                  | 113 |
| Modern Period (1868–Present)                                                                     | 118 |
| Summary                                                                                          | 126 |
| 6. The Monkey and the Special Status People in theReflexive Structure of the Japanese        | 128 |
| Dualistic Cosmology                                                                              | 130 |
| Deities as Mirrors of Humans                                                                     | 133 |
| Purity and Impurity in the Japanese Ethos                                                        | 137 |
| The Sacred, the Secular, and the Impure                                                          | 140 |
| Cosmological Principles and Classification of People                                             | 144 |
| Mediators and Scapegoats as Reflexive Agents                                                     | 149 |
| Clowns as Reflexive Agents                                                                       | 151 |
| Mediator, Scapegoat, and Clown in a Dualistic Universe:Theoretical Considerations            | 154 |

PART THREE: BASIC STRUCTURE, PROCESSUAL- CONTEXTUAL STRUCTURE, AND MULTIPLE STRUCTURES OF MEANING

|                                                                    |     |
|--------------------------------------------------------------------|-----|
| 7. The Monkey Performance of the LateMedieval Period           | 163 |
| Basic Structure of Meaning: Monkey Performance asStable Ritual | 164 |

CONTENTS

|                                                                                                                   |     |
|-------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------|-----|
| Processual and Contextual Structures of Meaning: Monkey Performance as Street Entertainment                       | 168 |
| Framing of the Monkey Performance                                                                                 | 179 |
| 8. The Monkey Performance in Contemporary Japan                                                                   | 183 |
| Monkey Performance at a Festival in 1980                                                                          | 183 |
| Monkey Performance at a Park in Tokyo in 1984: Monkey as Clown                                                    | 186 |
| Discussion                                                                                                        | 204 |
| PART FOUR: FROM THE MEDIATING MONKEY TO THE REFLEXIVE MONKEY: HISTORICAL TRANSFORMATIONS AND RITUAL STRUCTURE |     |
| 9. Structures of Meaning in History, Myth, and Ritual                                                             | 209 |
| Monkey Performance: Text, Context, and Performance                                                                | 209 |
| Structural Regularities in Transformation                                                                         | 217 |
| Historical Regularities                                                                                           | 221 |
| History, Myth, and Ritual                                                                                         | 235 |
| Musings on the Reflexive Monkey                                                                                   | 238 |
| References                                                                                                        | 241 |
| Index                                                                                                             | 261 |

