This book stems from the sixty-eighth A. W. Mellon Lectures in the Fine Arts, which I delivered at the National Gallery of Art, Washington, D.C., from March to May 2019. I therefore want to thank the Board of Trustees of the National Gallery for inviting me to give this series of six lectures, the Center for Advanced Study in the Visual Arts for providing me with an inspirational intellectual home during the lecture months, and the leadership of the Center and colleagues there, especially Elizabeth Cropper, Therese O'Malley, and Peter M. Lukehart, not only for guiding me through the lectures but for being the first to respond to them. Elise Ferone provided the most meticulous professional assistance I have ever received for any invited lecture. The preparation of visual materials for the lecture series and for this book was facilitated by Cynthia Ware, Annie G. Miller, Lisa Shea, Sara Sanders-Buell, and Xi Zhang. Jonathan Hay, Hongnam Kim, Jan Stuart, Jessica Rawson, Craig Clunas, Wei-Cheng Lin, and Zheng Yan all helped me in solving various problems. I owe a huge debt to all of them.

My wife Judith Zeitlin, a professor in Chinese literature and culture, accompanied me during this period and was naturally the first person to hear my thoughts about the lectures. Her comments and suggestions were truly indispensable to this entire project. While in D.C. we were warmly received by friends and colleagues, whose hospitality, whether professional or personal, made the city an exciting place to live and explore. Among them, I want to especially thank Erna Marcus and Steven Allee, Jenny So, Jan Stuart, Libby Rosenthal and Andrej Mrevlje, Charles Dempsey, JP Park, and Michelle Wang. Many friends, former and current students, and relatives traveled to D.C. from different places to attend the lectures. I am very grateful for their support.

As the designated publisher of the A. W. Mellon Lectures in the Fine Arts, Princeton University Press engaged me in a lengthy and highly sophisticated publication process from the onset of the lecture series. Christie Henry and Michelle Komie, Director and Publisher of Art & Architecture of the Press, gave the book their initial blessing. They and other members of the Press, including Karen Carter, Kenneth Guay, and Steven Sears, have done a fantastic job to bring it to the public. Joseph Dahm meticulously edited the entire book. Two anonymous reviewers provided invaluable suggestions. I want to express my deep gratitude to them.
