

ACKNOWLEDGMENTS

I have been immensely fortunate in the many friends, family, and colleagues who have given generously of their time, expertise, and judgment to help improve this book. For comments on all or part of the manuscript I am grateful to Bina Agarwal, Ingela Alger, Richard Andrews, Terri Apter, David Austen-Smith, Margaret Bent, Jeanet Sinding Bentzen, Corinne Bonnet, Robin Briggs, Wendy Carlin, Eric Chaney, Tyler Cowen, Jacques Crémer, Etienne Danchin, Isabelle Daudy, John Drury, Jeremy Edwards, Rosalind English, Cécile Fabre, Roy Flechner, Guido Friebe, David Gellner, Peter Ghosh, Karen Gold, Tim Gowers, Carrie Gracie, Ashok Guha, Markus Haller, Thomas Hegghammer, Cecilia Heyes, Peregrine Horden, Sriya Iyer, Nicola Lacey, Jibirila Leinyuy, Hartmut Leppin, Debin Ma, Stephen Maurer, Rachel McCleary, Pepita Miquel-Florensa, Patricia Morison, Fitzroy Morrissey, Avner Offer, Sheilagh Ogilvie, David Parkin, Brett Parris, Alice Seabright, Edmond Seabright, Luke Seabright, Richard Sheahan, Kim Sterelny, Alan Strathern, David Vines, Chris Von Rueden, Charlotte Wang, Harvey Whitehouse, Andrew Wilson, and Michael Wilson. The book has been much changed and improved by their contributions, but they should not be presumed to agree that it has improved enough.

In addition to the above, Alain Alcouffe, Jean-Paul Azam, Jerrilyn Dodds, Stephen Greenblatt, Claire Hall, Sara Lipton, and Alberto Simpser gave me valuable advice on data sources, quotations, and illustrations.

A conversation two decades ago with Giuseppe Bertola convinced me that it was worth devoting serious time to studying the economics of religion. A much more recent conversation with John Fingleton opened my eyes to the importance of organizational characteristics in understanding the Catholic Church. Talking on many occasions to Brian Boyd was a formative experience in thinking about narratives. Kim Sterelny has repeatedly challenged my lazy thinking about religion and its origins. Conversations with Gani Aldashev, Coren Apicella, Robert Barro, Samuel Bowles, Gloria Carnevali, Jean-Paul Carvalho, Eric Crubézy, Richard Dawkins, Daniel Dennett, Mireille Gealageas, Andrew Goreing, Susan Greenfield, Pauline Grosjean, David Hart, César Hidalgo, Angela Hobbs, Antoine Jacquet, Hillard Kaplan, Agnès Klarsfeld, Alain Klarsfeld, Nathalie Luca, Mary Morgan, David Newbery, Rory O'Connor, Jean-Philippe Platteau, Nicholas Rawlins, Rupert Shortt, David Soskice, Susie Symes, Benoit Vermander, Frans de Waal, and Se Yan have all left their mark on this book.

Over the more than ten years that I have been working on this project, my colleagues in Toulouse, at both the Toulouse School of Economics and the Institute for Advanced Study in Toulouse (IAST), have been a constant source of inspiration and delight. Delphine Pouts was an outstanding administrative support to me during the nine years I was director of IAST. As well as those I've already thanked, I'd like to mention Jean-François Bonnefon, Margot Dazey, Maxime Derex, Ray Duch, Mohamed Saleh, Manvir Singh, Jennifer Stephenson, Jonathan Stieglitz, Jean Tirole, and Karine Van Der Straeten, with all of whom I've had fruitful discussions of these issues.

Much of the book was written while I was a Two-Year Fellow at All Souls College, Oxford, from 2021 to 2023, for the first year of which I was fortunate to have sabbatical leave from the University of Toulouse. I'm extremely grateful to John Vickers, warden of All Souls, as well as to the Fellows for allowing me this privileged time of quiet and reflection. David Addison, Katherine Backler, Ruth Harris, James Malcolmson, Miriam Meyerhoff, Catherine Morgan, Stephen Smith, and Amia Srinivasan gave me many valuable ideas and suggestions.

My coauthors on topics related to this project include Emmanuelle Auriol, Diego Delissaint, Maleke Fourati, Selin Goksel, Julia Hoefer, César Mantilla, Emanuela Migliaccio, Josepa Miquel-Florensa, Amma Panin, Eva Raiber, Weiwei Ren, Suping Shen, Charlotte Wang, Donghui Yang, and Ling Zhou. It has been a privilege to work with you.

For outstanding research assistance I'm grateful to Amandine Belard, Julia Hoefer, and Sunny Wang. In particular, Sunny Wang prepared most of the figures in the statistical appendix, and Julia Hoefer read the whole manuscript to check the coherence of the citations and the completeness of the bibliography. The accuracy of the citations remains my responsibility.

I have been associated with Princeton University Press for over twenty years. Richard Baggaley and Peter Dougherty were excellent colleagues from early on. I'm grateful to my editor Hannah Paul for her judgment, enthusiasm, and patience; to Jenny Wolkowicki for steering the book through production; to Maia Vaswani for copy-editing, and Virginia Ling for preparing the index; and to Josh Drake and Dimitri Karetnikov for managing the figures and illustrations. My agent Catherine Clarke has for more than two decades been an unfailing source of advice and encouragement (and, where appropriate, tactful discouragement of my more harebrained ideas). A word at the right time with her can provide inspiration, unlock a disagreement, or avoid months of fruitless effort.

Finally, Alice, Edmond, Luke, Isabelle, Charlotte, Jack, and Diana all supported me in other ways too numerous to list.

