

ACKNOWLEDGEMENTS

This monograph began life as a Ph.D. thesis researched in the School of History at the University of St Andrews between 1998 and 2002. Neither this book nor my postgraduate studies would have been possible without the generous financial assistance of the Scottish Parliament Project, set up in 1997 by the Scottish Office and subsequently funded by the Scottish Executive. Many thanks are due to my Ph.D. supervisor Professor Keith Brown, who has been a constant source of helpful advice, encouragement and assistance both while I was writing my doctoral thesis and subsequently under his employment as a research fellow at St Andrews. Numerous conversations with my project colleague Dr Alastair Mann on various aspects of late seventeenth-century Scottish history have proved very rewarding and I have benefited immensely from his in-depth knowledge of the parliamentary records in the period covered by this book. Dr John Young at the University of Strathclyde initially introduced me to the early modern Scottish parliament as an undergraduate and I am extremely grateful to him for his assistance in my honours year and his subsequent interest in my work. Many thought-provoking discussions with other colleagues, past and present, on the Scottish Parliament Project – Dr Alan MacDonald, Dr Alison McQueen, Dr Derek Patrick, Dr Pamela Ritchie and Dr Roland Tanner – have significantly broadened the perspectives of my initial research and this book can only have been improved as a result. Thanks are due to all my fellow editors on the project for making the lengthy task of producing a digital edition of the records of the pre-1707 Scottish parliament a largely genial and rewarding experience.

In researching this book friendly and helpful assistance has been provided by the staff of the National Archives of Scotland, the National Library of Scotland, the Scottish National Portrait Gallery, Glasgow University Library, St Andrews University Library and the Mitchell Library, Glasgow. I am especially grateful to the Earl of Dalhousie, Mr Archibald Stirling of Keir and to Mr D. Maxwell

Macdonald of Pollok and Corrour Ltd for kind permission to consult and quote from their family papers. Gracious acknowledgement is due to the Duke of Buccleuch for granting me permission to visit the Queensberry archives at Drumlanrig Castle and to his archivist Mr Andrew Fisher for his helpful assistance with the collection.

My greatest debt is to my family, especially my parents Jim and Frances MacIntosh, for their support, financial and otherwise, throughout my education. My sister Fiona and brother David have always provided a welcome diversion from academic study. Sincere thanks are also due to Alan Black, my uncle, for the many enjoyable summer jaunts around deepest darkest Sussex and the innumerable Dorset cream teas. I am fortunate enough to have inherited his instinctive curiosity and enthusiasm for archival research, albeit a few centuries separate our particular interests.
